Madrid Sets Visa Rules And Calls for Vessels To Start Fishing Again

By Tom Buerkle

BRUSSELS - Spain on Tuesday stepped up pressure on Canada to free a Spanish trawler seized in a fishing dispute spanish trawler seized in a fishing dispute by imposing visa requirements on Canadi-an visitors and urging other Spanish boats to resume fishing off Newfoundland. Canada said it would not back down in the dispute and said that Spanish ships had resumed fishing in international waters in a "provocative" manner. European Union and Canadian officials played down talk of retaliatory sanctions in an attempt to prevent the dispute from leading to a wider trade war, but each side continued to accuse the other of bad faith.

The EU fisheries commissioner, Emma Bonino, said Canada had "taken hostage the whole international community" by seizing the vessel, the Estai, in international waters on Timusday, She said the Union was willing to negotiate over fishing rights in the area, but only after Canada frees the boat, its cargo and captain.

Prospects for a negotiated solution appeared to improve late Tuesday as a court in St. John's, Newfoundland, freed the vessel's captain.

The captain, Enrique Davila González, ppeared briefly in court on charges of illegal fishing. The captain, who had been free on bail, can now leave the country, but the Estai remains under Canadian control.

EU officials protested indications that Canada would seize the Estar's cargo and et a bond of 5 million Canadian dollars ($3.5 million) on the boat

Earlier, Canadian officials presented ex idence that they contended justified the scizure. Officials said inspections showed that the Estai had used nets smaller than the legal size and caught young fish, prac-tices that hinder efforts to rebuild depleted stocks around the Grand Banks off New-

We have an obligation in Canada to help to protect the resources of Canada and the resources of the rest of the world," Trade Minister Roy MacLaren said in Australia, where he was on an official visit. "We're not going to stand by again and see the devastation of the halibut fisheries."

Spain continued to take a tough line in the dispute. Foreign Minister Javier So-lana Madariaga said the government was "contemplating all means available within the law and within diplomatic rules," including the possibility of cutting trade and diplomatic relations.

Spanish shipowners also urged about 20 boats in the northwest Atlantic to resume fishing despite the risk of further clashes with Canada.

But EU officials refused to speculate about possible trade sanctions. "I'm interested in de-escalating this thing, not escalating it," said Sir Leon

Brittan, the EU trade commissioner. The Union's primary fear is that Canada is using the dispute to push its jurisdiction beyond the 200-mile (325-kilometer) limit now recognized under the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea. The Canadian ambassador to the Union fueled those fears Tuesday, saying Canada would seek clearer rights for coastal states to protect migratory fish stocks beyond the 200-mile limit when nations that have signed the convention meet in New York

U.S. Tells Russia: Don't Be Afraid of NATO

Clinton to Exchange Letters With Yeltsin on Alliance's Goals

By Steven Greenhouse New York Times Service.

WASHINGTON - Eager to reduce Russia's opposition to expanding NATO, President Bill Clinton is planning to exchange letters with President Boris N. Yeltsin to assure him that NATO no longer is an anti-Russian alliance, according to senior administration officials:

The officials said that they were going out of their way to make Mr. Yeltsin feel comfortable about extending NATO into Eastern Europe in hopes of easing tensions that have developed not only over NATO but also over Russia's offensive in the breakaway region of Chechnya and Moscow's plans to build nuclear reactors in

The letters, which officials said would be exchanged over the next 10 days, will exintended to address a worrisome perception among Russians that NATO is biding information as it moves to expand and that NATO's 16 nations see Russia as a country little more powerful than Poland or

For the administration, the letters are also important to remove an irritant before Mr. Clinton visits Moscow, probably before June 30. Mr. Yeltsin is pressing Mr. Clinton to visit Moscow on May 9 and 10 to celebrate, along with the Russian Army, Nazi Germany.

The White House has being off on accepting the invitation. But because the president has made a public commitment to visit Russia in any case by the end of June. his aides said he questioned the wisdom of abandoning what might be an important incentive to Moscow. They now say he has decided to leave open the prospect of a May visit in hopes of inducing Mr. Yeltsin

Clinton Says No Deal On Iran's Oil Fields

Executive Order Serves to Warn Tehran and Pressure Europeans

By Paul F. Horvitz International Herald Tribine

WASHINGTON - President Bill Clinton, hoping to further isolate Iran and set an example for Western allies, drew on his executive powers Tuesday to prevent an American oil company from developing Iran's Gulf oil fields.

In a statement issued by the White House, Mr. Clinton said he would issue an order that would prohibit American companies from "entering into contracts for the financing or the overall supervision and management of the development of petroleum resources in Iran."

The order was prompted by a deal an-nounced last week in which a Dutch affiliate of Conoco Inc., Conoco Iran N.V., agreed to develop two Gulf oil and gas fields for the Iranian government that could yield 120,000 barrels of crude a day.

Conoco, based in Houston, is owned by the Delaware-based E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Company and is the ninth-largest oil company in the Umited States, Mr. Clinton's order not only blocked the development agreement and put Tehran on notice about dealing with U.S. energy companies, but it may also put greater pressure on European nations negotiating contracts with Tehran.

France, Germany and Russia are among the countries the White House bopes to influence; the U.S. particularly hopes to prevent Iran from buying nuclear reactors.

The administration called for its trading partners to follow its lead. "The U.S. will be renewing diplomatic efforts with Iran's principal trading partners urging them to ake measures comparable with those of the U.S.," said Peter Tarnoff, undersecretary of state for political affairs. U.S.-based multinational oil companies purchase about one-fourth of Iran's oil but sell it outside the United States, thus adhering to a ban on importing Iranian oil to the United States. But this practice is under fire in Con-Chancellor Helmut Wohl of Germany when he was asked about German efforts A Response From Iran to do business with Iran.

In any case, it appeared likely that Iran will eventually develop the oil fields: Two French oil companies. Elf Aquitaine SA and Total SA, had competed with Conoco for the development project, and Royal Dutch/Shell was also said to have been a hidder.

Du Pont's board of directors, including Edgar M. Bronfman, co-chairman of the eagram Company and a leading figure in the World Jewish Congress. Mr. Bronfman and two other Seagram officials on the Du Pont board were expected to vote against the Conoco deal, making it unlikely that it would go

After the White House statement, Con-oco announced that it would not proceed with the Iran deal.

The Houston Chronicle newspaper reported Tuesday that some Clinton administration officials suggested that Conoco had asked for an executive order blocking the deal to provide a graceful withdrawal.
Indeed, Mr. McCurry said the White House "worked cooperatively with the senior executives of Conoco.' Mr. Clinton, and other U.S. presidents before him, have sought to isolate Iran economically and diplomatically, saying Tehran supports terrorist groups, works to undermine peace efforts in the Middle East and seeks to dominate the Gulf region hy acquiring nuclear weapons. To permit the Conoco deal to go through, the White House said, would "contribute to Iran's productive capacity and its economic and financial strength."

Mr. McCurry also said, "We need to send a clear and unequivocal message to Iran: There cannot be normal relations until Iran's unacceptable behavior

Changes."
White House aides said an executive order was being drafted Tuesday, but may not he signed for several days.

The Conoco deal was the first such oil agreement signed with Iran since the fall of the shah in 1979. The United States banned commercial trade with Iran that year after the seizure of the U.S. Embassy in Tehran by Islamic militants, but White House officials acknowledged last week that the Conoco deal appeared to be legal.

Mr. Clinton was reported to have acted under the International Emergency Economic Powers Act, which permits such

Noted U.S. Blacks Put Weight on Nigeria

By Kevin Merida Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON - A group of prominent African-Americans is launching a campaign to pressure Nigeria's military rulers to restore democracy there — the first time such an influential group of American blacks has aggressively targeted a black African government, organizers

The effort will include newspaper ads condemning the military regime and possican and Caribbean issues.

"We will oppose the Nigerian government with as much tenacity as we opposed the South African government, with as much tenacity as we opposed the military regime in Haiti," said Randall Robinson, TransAfrica's executive director. "It is not easy to publicly criticize black leadership. It is uncomfortable and disquieting. But we are left with no alternative."

The effort is being backed by a crosssection of black politicians, scholars, entertainers, civil rights leaders and other notable figures. They include the poet Maya Angelou, the television host Bryant Gumbel, and the former presidential canpublican from Oklahoma, Spelman Col-

MIAMI - In a move both radical and old-fashioned, Florida has become the first American state to propose throwing away its rule books and making decisions based on common sense.

Where would society be without rules? Better off, says Fiorida's governor, Lawton Chiles, a Democrat who strapped on a back brace last week to hold aloft 50 pounds (20 kilograms) of state regulations - 3,500 of them — that his agencies are ready to gut immediately.

One state agency, the Department of Transportation, has proposed getting rid of every one of its rules for a period of three years and replacing them with loose guidelines that would set out goals but allow bureaucrats to make decisions on their own.

"Common sense and flexibility! That's a radical thought, but every once in a while we hureaucrats come up with something strange," said Florida's transportation secretary, Ben G. Watts.

Mr. Chiles has proposed repealing at least half of Florida's 28,750 rules by the end of the 1996 legislative session, leaving only those deemed crucial to public health and safety.

The regulations cover health, environmental protection, land development, transportation, education, commerce, business licensing and contracting.

Mr. Chiles can cut several thousand by executive order, but he needs legislative approval to cut thousands more. Many observers say such approval will he forthcoming. The proposal has broad hipartisan support, hut its details are now just emerging, and some critics are wary AIRO — The scene was a familiar one, President Hosni Mubarak and an American secretary of state, side-by-side in the glittering reception room of Ittihadiya Palace. And as usual, Warren M. Christopber put in a good word for his host.

It was, Mr. Christopher said, "not an accident" that many of his 12 trips to the Middle East had begun with a visit to Mr. Mubarak, one of America's strongest allies in the region and a longtime partner in the search for Middle East peace.

But if Mr. Mubarak still wins plaudits from the West, his record at bome is far less

After almost 14 years in power, the Mu-barak regime is floundering, beset by bureaucratic paralysis, cronyism and wide-spread allegations of corruption, including charges against members of Mr. Mubarak's family. Economie reforms have slowed or stalled. Mr. Mubarak's claims of "democratization" bave been undermined by his brutally efficient crackdown on Islamic militants and, more recently, political opponents who share their goal of an Islam-

The security campaign has been effective: At least for now, militant violence has been confined to Upper Egypt, and the all-impor-tant tourist industry is starting to rebound after two disastrous years.

But the government's record in attacking the social causes of the unrest looks far less impressive. Despite the infusion of $35 billion in American aid over the past 17 years, most Egyptians seem to have little to show for it. Half of them still cannot read. Unem-ployment is stuck at 17 percent. Living standards have eroded. The population, meanwhile, is projected to swell from 60 million today to 104 million by 2025.

VEN Mr. Mubarak's relationship with the United States has hit a rough patch. He bas irritated American officials by threatening to withhold support for extending the nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty if Israel does not sign the accord, as Egypt bas. U.S. officials, who have not pressed Israel to sign the accord, say Egypt's failure to support its extension could cause it to unravel.

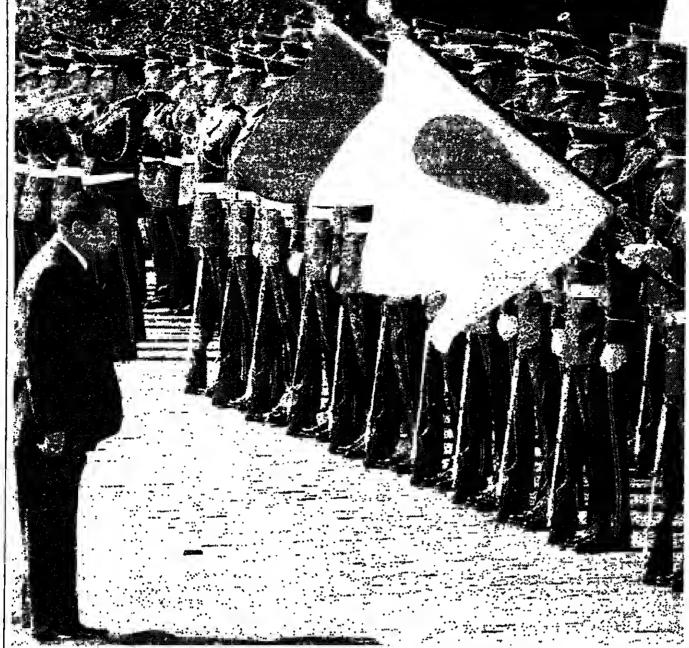

Perhaps the biggest uncertainty for Mr. Mubarak is whether popular discontent could seep into Egypt's 400,000-man army, which so far has remained above the political fray despite some erosion of status and benefits over the last several years.

"You can see in the streets that people are suffering, and possibly that is a greater threat to the stability of the regime than a few gun-toting militants," said a Western diplomat who asked oot to be identified. "There's oo delegation of responsibility. There's no motivation of the work force, and power is concentrated in the hands of very few people."

Western governments have loog enjoyed a close relationship with Mr. Mubarak, a former air force chief of staff who was vice president under Anwar Sadat and took over es president upon Mr. Sadat's assassination in 1981. He supported the peace process and backed the U.S.-led coalition to eject Iraqi forces from Kuwait, in 1991.

On the domestic froot, Mr. Mubarak established a repotation as a largely benevolent dictator, known to agonize over the social costs of tiny adjustments in food or gas subsidies. He presided over major im-provements in roads, sewers, telephooes and other amenities of modern life, many paid for with U.S. aid.

But change has come far more slowly to the country's political institutions. Some of Mr. Mubarak's cabinet ministers have served for a decade or more. The governing National Democratic Party dominates the Parliament, and Mr. Mubarak has shown scant interest in allowing that to change.

The party has buge advantages over its competition, cootrolling the distribution of patronage jobs and favors as well as broad-cast media, of paramount importance in a country with 50 percent illiteracy. From all indications, moreover, the regime is moving to tighten its grip, ruling out a slate system io parliameotary elections oext fall that some opposition leaders contend would have given them a better chance. "They're centralizing control," a Western diplomat said. Mr. Mubarak sometimes seems to run the government almost single-handedly, personally approving major investment projects and, in one recent case, issuing an order for playground equipment in rural

UT to his critics, that claim only reinforced an impression of imperiousness. "He has no advisers," said a former insider. "Since the Gulf War, the president has tended to tell people what to do. He has become a very bad listener. He has become cocky. Ruling Egypt looks very easy to him." Mr. Mubarak's popularity has oot been helped by pervasive rumors about the business activities of senior officials and their relatives, including Mr. Mubarak's two sons. Many Egyptians and some diplomats believe that officials have become rich off commissions from companies that do business with the government. Government spokesmen deny the charges and say they are circulated by political opponents to discredit the regime.

The government's biggest handicap may be inertia, a weakness that shows up most clearly in the economic realm. In exchange for promises of debt relief. Egypt has embarked on a program of economic restructuring. By most accounts, the government got off to a promising start, curbing inflation, cutting budget deficits and removing some trade barriers, among other things.

But the regime has so far failed to follow through oo the toughest part of the program, selling off inefficient public-sector factories and businesses that are a legacy of Egypt's Soviet-style, centrally planned economy. So far, only a handful have been turned over to private ownership.

overmanned bureaucracy, meanwhile continues to deter foreign investors. Importers complain that 22 signatures are required to liberate a food shipment from Egyptian customs, and legal disputes can drag on for a decade or more. Security is one area where the regime has proved capable of decisive action. But the cost has been high in terms of abuses such as torture, extrajudicial killings, imprisonment without trial and mass arrests. The government recently has expanded its campaign to include not just the militants but its main Islamic fundamentalist opposition, the Muslim Brotherhood, whose middle- and apper-middle-class member-ship also dominates professional unions for lawyers, doctors and engineers.

Security forces have arrested several dozen Muslim Brotherhood leaders and rankand-file members, holding them under emergency laws that permit detention of suspected terrorists. The government also has gone after the unions, passing a law to place union elections under supervision of the judiciary in an apparent bid to diminish the influence of the fundamentalists.

"The government cannot beat us in elections, so they're hitting us below the belt," said Salah Abdel Kareem, a British-educated aerospace engineer. He estimated that 80 percent of the union's governing board are

The government campaign appeared to cross a threshold with the arrest last December of Adel Hussein, a prominent writer and general secretary of the opposition Labor Party, which is closely tied to the fundamentalist.

ROSECUTORS said Mr. Hussein was arrested following the discovery of militant literature on an air-line seat he had occupied on a flight from London. Mr. Hussein denied the charge. A Western diplomat noted that the arrest came shortly after Mr. Hussein wrote an article attacking official corruption.

Mr. Hussein was held in Cairo's infamous

Tora prison, where, he said in an interview, he stayed for the first two days in a lightless cell with no mattress, a filthy toilet and single blanket. Conditions gradually improved following international press coverage of his confinement, he said, and he was released after 24 days. "Everyone understood that it was meant to scare the opposition," be said. "It meant that a new phase has started."

Government officials acknowledge as much. They say Mr. Mubarak and his advisers concluded six months ago that the Muslim Brotherhood's claims of moderation were disingenuous, since it shares the mili-tants' goal of an Islamic state. These people can be much more dangerous than bullets. Why? Because they are spreading the concepts, said Nabil Osman, chairman of Egypt's State Information Service. "Their claim of moderation — it's lip service."

Few suggest the regime is in imminent danger. The army, Mr. Muliarak's main pillar of support, continues to enjoy generation. ous perks. Mr. Mubarak approved a pay raise last year despite the budget deficit.

But pressures on the army are likely to intensify, especially if the United States reduces its $2.1 billion annual aid package. more than half of which goes to the military. The sum covers 56 percent of the military

Britain Pulls 400 Troops Out Of Ulster

By Fred Barbash

LONDON - Britain on Tuesday announced its first troop reduction in Northern Ireland since the August ceasefire, small in size but large in significance.

The redeployment of 400 of 18,000 soldiers stationed in the province signals government confidence in the peace that has prevailed there since Catholic and Protestant paramilitaries ceased their terrorism last fall.

Though officials said the decision was based exclusively on a lessened need for their pres-ence, officials also hope it will encourage the Irish Republican Army, on the Catholic side, and Army, on the Catholic side, and their counterparts on the Protestant "loyalist" side to talk seriously about eliminating their stockpiles of weapons and explosives. A lack of progress on that subject is stalling talks between the government and representatives of the paramilitary organizations.

Those discussions, if successful, are to be followed by nego-tiations involving all the politi-cal parties in Northern Ireland on a permanent settlement.

The British government first sent troops to Northern Ireland in 1969, when widespread sec-tarian violence left the police incapable of restoring order. They have been there ever since, patrolling the streets of Belfast in armored vehicles.

More than 3,300 people, inchuding 445 British soldiers, have been killed in the violence. The government has already reduced the profile of the military in the six months of peace, first replacing their helmets with berets and then using patrols only at night.

"This decision has been taken solely on the basis of the operational judgment of the security forces' commanders," said Patrick Mayhew, the Northern Ireland secretary, as be made the announcement. "It reflects the improved security situation and is a further step towards normality."

He said the government would reverse itself should the situation require it.

The slight reduction produced a rare moment of agreement from political leaders on both sides of the Catholio-Protestant divide, who said they ap-proved of the measure.

While there was peace in the streets in Northern Ireland on Tuesday, a riot erupted among loyalist prisoners in the provguards were reported injured in the disturbance. Officials said the rioting — which include the setting of fires — appeared to have begun when guards attempted to search a cell. ■ U.S.-British Rift Denied

The White House said that President Bill Clinton tried unsuccessfully to reach Prime Minister John Major by telephone on Monday, but it demied that the failure was due to a dispute over U.S. policy toward Northern Ireland, Reuters reported from Washington.

The White House spokes-man, Michael McCurry, confirmed Tuesday that Mr. Clinton had tried to call Mr. Major but that the prime minister was traveling and "they didn't connect." He denied reports that Mr. Major had snubbed Mr. Clinton to show his displeasure over the warm U.S. reception for Gerry Adams, the leader of Sinn Fein.

Republican Plans Rouse Debate on Constitution's Role

By Joan Biskupic Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON - The many Republican proposals to amend the U.S. Constitution reflect a new idea of the nation's charter. Congressional Republicans would use the constitution to alter economic policy, institute new social rules and transform American behavior.

Scholars say the proposed amendments from one to balance the budget to one banning flag-burning - represent a departure from amendments adopted in the past century, which have been mostly at the margins and for procedural, rather than substantive, goals.

Earlier amendments went to the fundamental rights of Americans, from free speech to voting rights.

42.50 The new desire to amend the constitution "is part of the general trend to try to write morality into law," said Douglas Kmiec, a Notre Dame University law professor and an official in the Justice Department under President Ronald

"We cannot control our appetite to spend money, so we'll try to control it by writing it into law," Mr. Kmiec said, referring to Congress's amendments in the 20th century have been progress and then be ratified by three-fourths of the failure to-balance the budget.

Mr. Kmiec and other scholars said that if many of the proposed changes were adopted, the notion of the constitution as a document written for the ages could be altered.

But Republican lawmakers, who have failed to get the results they seek through statutory legis-lation or the courts, say constitutional amendments are necessary to achieve the changes that they believe voters want and that traditional politics have not delivered.

"This is not business as usual," said Senator Hank Brown, Republican of Colorado. "It comes from a conviction by many Americans that the future of the country is at stake."

Other pending amendments that seek social change would permit organized school prayer, disallow abortion and prohibit the federal government from passing on the cost of regulations

Also in the stack is a proposal to require congressional term limits and one to allow the president to strike individual spending items from appropriations bills. With the notable exception of Prohibition,

Now Republicans say that extraordinary times require great constitutional revision. As Mr. Brown put it, the Republican agenda "stems from a conviction that things have gone seriously awry in the country and that basic reform is

The 18th Amendment, prohibiting the manufacture and sale of liquor, is a rare example of a social policy that was adopted. Approved in 1919, Prohibition was repealed in 1933 by the 21st Amendment.

The current proposals, which are not without some Democratic support, strike the core of the constitution and have stirred debate on what the document stands for.

Some legal scholars believe that constant moves to change the constitution could lead to a habit of revisions or at least less regard for the

A Death Sentence Over Drug Killing

Move Would Be a U.S. First

WASHINGTON — The Federal Bureau of Prisons plans to execute a convicted drug trafficker who authorized a contract murder, a move that would mark the first time the U.S. govern-ment has used capital punishment since 1963.

David R. Chandler, an Alabama drug trafficker who was convicted of hiring a hit man to kill a police informant, is scheduled to die hy lethal injection on March 30 at a federal prison in Terre Haute, Indiana. Authorities have notified Mr. Chandler of the execution date, but his attorney said he planned to seek a new trial based on new evidence. Mr. Chandler was the first inmate to receive the death sentence under the federal Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988, which provides for capital punishment for killings associated with a criminal enterprise. Five other federal inmates convicted under this statute are await-

LOS ANGELES - A defense attorney suggested Tuesday that a detective tried to distract other investigators so he could plant a hloody glove at O. J. Simpson's estate the morning after Mr. Simpson's former wife was murdered.

As he underwent a second day of cross-examination by F. Lee Bailey, the detective, Mark Fuhrman, remained unflappable, smiling when the attorney tried to imply that he had framed Mr. Simpson for murder.

Mr. Bailey suggested that Mr. Fuhrman had asked Detective Philip Vannatter to talk to a Simpson houseguest while Mr. Fuhrman went off alone to a narrow walkway behind Mr. Simp-

Why do the letters "f" and "s" sound so much alike over the phone when there is no trouble telling the difference in face-to-face conversation? Move Would Set Fees for Higher Education Agence France-Presse BELITNG - China indicated Tuesday that it would pursue its movement away from the major socialist principle of free education for all, while pledging to crack down on the most blatant manifestations of elite schooling. The director of the state education commission. Zhu Kaixuan, said state financing for edu-cation, about 103.5 billion yuan ($12,3 billion) this year, was insufficient to meet the needs of the 250 million individuals of school age,

Therefore, he said, "we need to have more extrabudgetary resources."

Methods of raising these resources include letting state schools charge fees to students outside the compulsory education period and expanding the number of privately run establishments that have mushroomed across the country in recent years, Mr. Zhu said.

China now has about 2,000 private schools at different levels, he said.

Mr. Zhu said state schools charged only nominal sums during the compulsory education period. He said annual fee ceilings would be enforced in private establishments. In 1986, China established a nine-year compulsory education program, which it hopes will include 85 percent of the population by the year

In addition, Mr. Zhu said, a new education Wednesday for three months of law, expected to be passed during the current repairs, pushing back a prosession of the National People's Congress, would ban local governments from placing additional financial burdens on students through unautho-

For universities, he said he regarded as acceptable the present annual fee level of 1,000 to 1,500 yuan - or about 10 percent to 20 percent of costs - in establishments directly run by the "Given the financial strength of ordinary households in China, I think they're in a position to cope with that," he said, adding that the government had a fund to help students from poorer families.

China's average per capita income last year was 3,179 yuan in urban areas and 1,220 yuan in

While supporting the emergence of privately run establishments to cater for the country's wealthier citizens, Mr. Zhu said the government would crack down on the emergence of "elite schools" that charge excessive amounts and "provide a luxurious way of life" for students.

Some establishments, he acknowledged, were charging "hundreds of thousands of yuan" in fees each year and treating students in a way that was having a "negative impact" on their

So-called Olympic schools, catering to the demands of urban parents wanting extracurricular training for their children, will also be discouraged, Mr. Zhu said.

Mr. Zhu said improving schooling in poor rural areas was one of China's biggest challenges.

The average dropout rate at schools in rural China is about 3 percent, compared with 2 per-cent in cities, he said, adding that the "priority among priorities" in the next six years was to expand compulsory education and to combat illiteracy.

The government has set 2000 as the target year for wiping out illiteracy in areas where 90 percent of the population live, Mr. Zhu said. He defined a literate individual as someone able to read

Life Expectancy Is Up in India

NEW DELHI -- The life expectancy of the average Indian has almost doubled in the past 40 years, while the literacy rate has nearly tripled to 52 percent in the same period, according to government data published Tuesday.

The figures in the Indian government's annual economic survey showed that although disease and poverty were still a significant part of life in India, conditions for its 900 million people were improving.

The survey showed the birth rate had dropped from 39.9 per 1,000 in 1951 to a provisional 28.5 in 1993, while the death rate had fallen from 27.4 per 1,000 to 9.2 in the same period.

ZAGREB, Croatia - As diplomats in New York begin ur-gent discussions about an expanded mission for the United Nations peacekeepers in Croatia, UN military commanders on the ground are worried that they will be given a mandate without the means to fulfill it.

Their fears are heightened because of emerging confusion about whether, under an agreement between U.S. and Croatian leaders last week, the UN forces would merely monitor Croatia's international borders, or whether they would be ex-pected to actually search vehicles and stop them from ferry-ing weapons into those areas of Croatia held by breakaway

The latter mission would be fraught with danger, and -depending how large an area was to be controlled — could require as many as 10,000 troops.

"We have been so burned by mandates that were militarily impossible that we're determined this time oot to get burned again," a senior UN of-ficer said Tuesday. He said it was critical for the UN "to define very clearly" what the UN troops would be expected to do aloog the border.

BRUSSELS - The presidents of South Korea and the European Commission agreed Tuesday on the need to beef up their political ties and press ahead with a joint accord on trade and cooperation now under negotiation.

"Both sides agreed that political relations between the European Union and the Republic of Korea should be developed further." President Kim Young Sam of Korea and the commission chief, Jacques Santer, said in a joint statement after their meeting.

But Korea has made it clear that it was not about to drop Kim Chul Su as a candidate to take over from Peter Sutherland as head of the World Trade Organization. The EU has likewise said it was oot going to give up on Renato Ruggiero as its candidate for the post.

Was This Necessary? Balladur Asks

PARIS - While President Fidel Castro of Cuba toured Paris on Tuesday, a foreign policy dispute over his visit blew up between the conservative government and Socialist presi-

Prime Minister Edouard Balladur sharply distanced him-self from President François Mitterrand's red-carpet welcome to the 68-year-old revolutionary leader. "I am not convinced that in the current circumstances there were grounds to give a spectacular character to relations between France and Cuba," Mr. Balladur said. Mr. Balladur, who is running for president, said France had to deal with foreign governments even when it had little sympathy for their human rights record.

But he backed Mr. Mitterrand's condemnation of the 34year-old U.S. trade embargo on Cuba, saying it was imposed when Washington felt its security threatened. Mr. Balladur said the embargo was no longer justified.

Italian Leader Calls Budget Passage Vital

Reuters ROME — Prime Minister Lamberto Dini appealed to Italian lawmakers Tuesday, saying they had to pass his emergency budget to prevent a financial crisis.

At the end of a debate on the 20-trillionlire ($12-billion) package in the Chamber of Deputies, he said nervous markets that have pushed the lira to record lows against the German mark wanted a clear sign that Italy could get to grips with its finances. "It would be a grave error oot to give this proof of willingness and ability immediately," Mr. Dini said.

"What must be restored as soon as possible is the confidence of markets and investors, at home and abroad, in our country's ability to confront an emergency which otherwise risks leading us towards a crisis that may be uncontrollable," he add-

His appeal to the 630-seat lower house, where he has oo secure majority, was aimed mainly at the center-right Freedom Alliance coalition, the faction of his predecessor, Silvio Berlusconi. The coalition says it intends to vote against the budget. A vote on the package, which was ap-proved in the Senate last week, was expected Wednesday.

Mr. Dini, a former central banker and treasury minister in the Berlusconi government that fell in December, has said he will resign if the budget, one of four goals on his policy agenda, is rejected.

His government, drawn from outside Italy's hung Parliament, won a vote of confidence in the Chamber on Jan. 25 only because of abstentions from the Berlusconi

In the budget vote, Mr. Dini could be da rescued by a split in the Communist Reestablishment Party.

Party members said about 15 of its 38 deputies might ignore leadership orders to vote against Mr. Dini and either support the budget or abstain.

The supplementary budget, which would raise taxes, is intended to keep Italy's 1995 budget deficit within its 138.6-trillion-lire ($82-billion) target.

Mr. Berlusconi, who swept to victory in a general election a year ago, resigned in December after the federalist Northern League party pulled out of his stormy coalition.

He has since pressed for an early election in June, accusing his opponents of using Mr. Dini to delay a vote.

Mr. Dini has repeatedly pledged to re-sign ooce he has enacted his limited agen-

IWO JIMA, Japan - They traded war stories, visited hattle sites and stood uneasily next to the men that they had tried their bardest to kill.

Half a century after the battle of Iwo Jima. American and Japanese veterans returned Tuesday to commemorate the struggle for an island that had once seemed so important that it absorbed tens of thousands of lives. These days, it has no permanent residents.

Even now, there are thousands of skeletons of Japanese soldiers buried in the manmade caves and tunnels of Iwo Jima, and for both sides the island still symbolizes the excesses of a horrid, hrutal and maniacal war.

Even 50 years cannot heal war wounds completely, and many veterans refrained from coming face to face with their former enemies. But they cooperated to arrange the daylong ceremonies, and some even returned their spoils of Kelly M. Sharbel, 72, a vet-eran who fought on the front lines in the attack on the island, pieked up four Japanese yen notes half a century ago money that some fallen Japanese soldier then had no need for. On Tuesday, he gave them to a Japanese war veteran he met at the commemoration.

"I thought I'd give some-thing back to them," said Mr. Sharbel, "I looked at him and be looked at me and I gave him the yen. He took it and thanked me with a bow." As Americans scraped up and took him prisoner. "Yesterday's enemy is to-day's friend," he said, as he stood by the Reunion of Honor Memorial, an engraved monument that was the centerpiece of Tuesday's joint ceremonies.

The handful of Japanese veterans and the 565 American veterans and their families talked of peace and shared a moment of silence in honor of those killed. But each side also held separate ceremonies on top of Mount Suribachi, underscoring a lingering bitter-.

After a first 100 days that have destroyed the hopes of Mexicans for new prosperity and shattered their sense of the country's political rules, Mr. Zedillo pointed only one way out of the crisis: to accept much greater economic hardship in the months ahead and to accelerate the pace of political

WASHINGTON -- Some of the questions about the whereabouts of former President Carlos Salinas de Gortari of Mexico were answered Tuesday when the White House said he was in the United States "traveling as a private citizen."

"I was not aware, for one thing, of how fast the structure, of the internal debt had changed," he said. "I became aware of the tesobono problemi in December." Wall Street analysts say the problem was evident by last fall, when a devaluation was being actively sought by several senior government officials, including the man who became Mr. Zedillo's finance ministen Guillermo Ortiz. But Mr. Zedillo suggested that a devalua-tion at that time would only have postponed a solution to the more fundamental problem of Mexico's dependence on huge flows of short-term foreign capital to finance the shortfall in its current account? The shortfall includes both the country's trade deficit and payments on its debt.

"A few days after we deval ued, I became convinced that we did not have a classical, current-account adjustment problem," Mr. Zedillo said. But when the government's first economic-recovery plan failed to calm the financial markets; he said, he realized that the problem was one that Mexico could not handle alone.

"That's when I called Mr. Clinton and told him that this was a very different ball game,"

In Mr. Zedillo's view, Mexico was merely the first so-called emerging economy to confront the growing power and immedi-acy of global financial markets.

Iraqi General Tried, but Failed, to Oust Saddam

By Elaine Sciolino New York Times Service

DAMASCUS — The head of Iraqi military intelli-gence during the Gulf War tried but failed to over-throw President Saddam Hussein early this month, according to American intelligence reports.

Wafiq Samaraii, a retired major general who was relieved of his military intelligence post in a purge, apparently tried to mount a coup with Iraq's main opposition group and with help from the Kurds in the north and the Shiites in the south, the reports said.

Although there have been myriad reports of coup plots against the Iraqi leader since the end of the Gulf War in 1991, the Clinton administration took this plot seriously because it indicated some attempt to coordinate opposition in the north and south, senior officials said on Monday.

Secretary of State Warren M. Christopher considered the plot noteworthy enough to give King Fand of Sandi Arabia, who professes a deep interest in Iraq, a lengthy briefing on it in Jidda.

Kurdish officials have tried to portray the coup attempt as an American-led effort to overthrow Mr. Saddam, but administration officials strongly denied the claim. The Central Intelligence Agency, however,

One reason the plot was doomed was that it was known about so widely in advance, according to senior Pentagon officials in Washington and Western diplomats in Damascus. American intelligence reports included prominent predictions of a coup, although officials initially denied their existence.

The primary reason the attempt failed was General Samaraii's exaggerated claims of wide support among Iraqi troops and elite Republican Guard units, officials in Washington said.

The coup was supposed to start with an attack against the 5th Corps by Kurdish forces loyal to Jalal Talabani, who enjoys strong support from Washington. Some Kurdish troops and fighters from the Iraqi National Congress, the major opposition group, al-ready had moved against one infantry division north

But as the coup began to unfold, rival Kurdish forces led by Massoud Barzani decided not to attack the 1st Corps farther south. The Kurdish forces "stood on the sidelines" when no Republican Guard units

The goal was to force the collapse of the Iraqi army by mounting attacks from north and south, and overthrow the government with an armored force from Tikrit, Mr. Saddam's birthplace and the center of his support. But those forces also stayed on the sidelines when there was no intense fighting in the north. According to some intelligence reports, Mr. Samar-

Some senior Western intelligence officials and diplomats who closely watch Iraq do not believe that the recent unrest in Iraq constituted a nascent coup. "Coup is too big a word," said a diplomat in Damascus. "It would mean preparation and effective military coordination, and there's just no evidence of that."

A U.S.-Russia Leap to Space In a First, Soyuz Carries an American Aloft

By Margaret Shapiro
Washington Post Service

BAIKONUR COSMODROME, Kazakhstan — A Russian Soyuz rocket carrying an American astronant for the first time blasted off Tuesday for the Mir space station on a mission that is to end with the historic docking of a U.S. space shuttle at the Mir station

The U.S. astronaut, Norman Thagard, 51, and two Russian cosmonauts were lifted sky-ward from the launching pad that the Soviet Union used more than 30 years ago for its two greatest space triumphs — the launching of Sputnik, the world's first satellite, and the flight of Yuri Gagarin, the first buman to orbit Earth. The giant rocket roared off the pad precisely on schedule at 11:11 A.M. after what appeared to be a flawless countdown.

Millions of Russians watched on television as the spacecraft disappeared into the stratosphere, and mission controllers said a short time later that it had achieved its prescribed

In the first two days of the flight, the three men will maneuver the craft to the Mir space station, then spend the next three months aboard the Mir conducting a variety of experiments on the effects of weightlessness on human beings.

They will return to Earth aboard the space shuttle Atlantis, which is scheduled to dock with the Mir in mid-June and install a new

The launching from this space center, which is leased from the former Soviet republic of Kazakhstan, was part of an ambitious joint research effort made possible by the end of the Cold War.

The once adversarial American and Russian space programs are being brought together by using the strengths of each to develop a new international space station.

Russia, which is struggling to keep its space program operating, will receive $100 million a year from the United States through 1997 in exchange for use of the Mir and information gathered from two decades of long-duration stays in space. U.S. shuttles will ferry American and Russian crews back and forth to the Mir, and U.S. astronauts will spend up to 21 months aboard the space station. The countries will work together in space to extend the life of the Mir - it is nine years old, although was built to last only three to five years - until a new space station can be sent aloft by a five-nation consortium in late

Two cosmonauts already bave flown in the shuttle. Sergei Krikalev was the first, in February 1994. Vladimir Titov was aboard the shuttle Discovery last month when it had a near rendezvous with the Mir.

Mr. Thagard is the first American to take part in the exchange. He and a backup astro-nant, Bonnie Dunbar, have been training for more than a year at Star City in living conditions much more basic than those experienced by astronauts in the United States.

The two were provided with small Russianstyle apartments and, like typical Russian cosmonants, had no washing machines or cars, according to NASA officials. There was also only one local food store at which they could shop, and it stocked little more than the Russian staples of salami, potatoes, frozen fish, cheese, fruit and dairy products. Condi-tions improved substantially after NASA stepped in, several months into the training

At a news conference Monday before the launching, Mr. Thagard, who has taken part in four shuttle flights, seemed at ease in his Russian surroundings and with his Russian colleagues, joking and talking with them be-hind a glass isolation wall.

He said he was delighted to have the oppor-tunity to fly on the Soyuz and was comfortable with the prospect of being crammed into a tiny spacecraft of the type the United States stopped using in 1972 when it shut the Apollo space program and turned toward developing the shuttle, which was first used in 1981.

Sierra Leone Rebels Pledge To Release Foreigners Soon

Avence France-Presse

ABIDJAN, Ivory Coast - Sierra Leone rebels said government attacks would prevent them from releasing a group of kidnapped foreigners on Wednesday as planned, but they promised to free the captives "within a few days." A Revolutionary United Front official, Alimamy Sankoh, said the release of the foreigners was stymied by "constant air raids and beavy artillery bombardments by foreign forces deployed by the military junta." Seventeen foreigners, including several nuns, disappeared in the west African country between Nov. 7 and Jan. 25.

Speaking from the Ivory Coast border town of Danane, 510 kilometers (315 miles) northwest of Abidjan, Mr. Sankoh disputed reports that some of the abducted foreigners were ill.

The front is battling the military junta in Freetown led by Captain Valentine E.M. Strasser. The rebels assert that the junta is supported by Iran and China.

NEW YORK - Emad Salem, the informer who secretly recorded the 11 men on trial for sedition in Federal District Court in Manhattan, has testified that some of the defendants had planned in early 1992 to explode 12 bombs at once around the city, with Jewish leaders and institutions as their main targets.

CIA Back in the Cabinet

It Shouldn't Happen

It was a huyer's market at the White House last week when President Bill Clinton called in John Deutch, second in command at the Pentagon, to sell him on taking the post of director of central intelligence. President Clinton's earlier selection, the retired air force general Michael Carns, was sinking fast and the White House was eager to have a substi-tute ready. Mr. Clinton got his man, and Mr. Deutch got his price: elevation of the post to cabinet rank.

It should not have happened. The last director of central intelligence to serve as a policymaker and cabinet member was William Casey during the Reagan administration. The policy he helped produce was the Iran-cootra affair.

While there is no evidence that Mr. Deutch is likely to lead the Central Intelligence Agency back into illegal covert operations and Indiana Jones escapades, there are other important reasons not to mix intelligence and policy-making. One of the natural laws of Washington is that presidents and other policymakers prefer intelligence reports that support their policies.

When the intelligence chief sits at the cabinet table, it is harder to keep intelligence assessments from becoming politicized. The president of the United States needs disinterested intelligence, analysis more than John Deutch needs a hand in making policy. To do the joh that is needed at the CIA, Mr. Deutch will have to be a strong manager and creative thinker, not a cabinet member. The inflated role and hudget of the CfA and other intelligence agencies need to be reviewed and reduced. Nearly 70 percent of the work of these agencies was devoted to monitor-ing the Soviet Union and its military

A Policy Competitor?

Air Force General Michael Carns withdrew his name from comination to he director of the CIA after questions were raised about whether he had violated the law in hringing in and paying a young Filipino who had lived with his family. Even if he had survived inquiry on these points, General Carns did not, be said, wish to be drawn into rebuttal of unspecified further "groundless, outrageous tabloid charges" about his family. We do not presume to speak oo these mysterious charges. But it is fair 10 say that everything that came to light about the professional capacities of General Carns after he was nominated for the CIA job indicated that he was especially well qualified for the joh itself, and it would be interesting to know whether, apart from the immigratioo-law actions for which he accepted culpability, he was recklessly victimized in the way he suggests. There has been more than plenty of that kind of actioo in American politics in recent years, and it is a trend worth worrying about.

President Bill Clinton, once again embarrassed by the explosion of a highprofile nomination, quickly selected John Deutch, who had earlier turned him down for the CIA joh, preferring to remain deputy secretary of defense.

Mr. Deutch's track record io science, industry and government gives him formidable credentials as intelligence chief. He cleared the confirmation hurdles recently enough, moreover, to suggest that he can meet the expansive tests of personal conduct that are now routinely put to aspirants for appointive as well as clective office.

Evidently as part of the negotiating that hrought the reluctant Mr. Deutch from the Pentagon to Langley, he was offered cahinet rank and promised a forces during the Cold War. While most of that work became outmoded when the Soviet Union disiotegrated more than three years ago, the $28 billion annual intelligence hudget has scarcely declined since.

Mr. Deutch is an official with strong views who does not shrink from expressing them. He has not always been an advocate of change. As the author of the administration's nuclear policy review. he resisted changes in an outmoded strategy and opposed deeper nuclear cuts. He has yet to reveal what he thinks about the CIA and the other intelligence agencies, hut he is enough of an insider to appreciate their failings and enough of an outsider to try to shake them up.

In announcing Mr. Deutch's selection, Mr. Clintoo regretted the with-drawal of General Carns, whose employment of a Filipino household worker may have violated labor and immigration law. Both President Clinton and General Carns complained that the confirmation process had hecome scalding and unfair to nominees

They were too quick to hlame the process in a case where the nomince's record turned out to he questionable and required thorough investigation. General Carns's successful career in the air force did not entitle him to a coronation as intelligence director.

Instead of bemoaning the treatment of General Carns, Mr. Clinton should have thanked the Senate Intelligence Committee and the Federal Bureau of Investigation for saving the administration from a worse embarrassment on a sensitive appointment.

ft is now up to Mr. Deutch to prove that he can belp rehuild the CIA without making it the pliable servant of administration policy.

hroad role in setting national security policy. The word was out that this was a move on Mr. Deutch's part to avoid being blocked and more or less downsized in his joh by White House persoonel the way his predecessor, James Woolsey, was. But such a step would go far beyond addressing the difficulty that Mr. Clinton's first CIA director had in gaining regular access to a president notoriously aloof, at the start anyway, from intelligence What would Mr. Deutch get from cabinet rank? For Ronald Reagan's man at CIA, William Casey, who had it, it evidently meant the license to make foreign policy, not just supply the administration with intelligence. It also gave him strong political status in warding off those in the Reagan administration who thought that in Iran-cootra and elsewhere be was exceeding his authority and using the unique capacity for secrecy of the CIA to do so. John Deutch is no Bill Casey. But the institutional rearrangement seems conetheless a bad idea whoever the head man at the CIA is to be.

It would coovert the director of the CIA, who is also by statute director of intelligence produced elsewhere in govemment (by the Defense Intelligence Agency, the National Security Agency etc.), from analyst to advocate. From being a nominally objective adviser to the president and the departmental chiefs, he becomes something of a com-petitor in policy debate, risking the pressure off the dollar worldwide - hnt this may just be a breathing space.

What happens next in Mexico - can the government make its plan stick? — is the most important question.

The $50 billion package to bail Mexico out of its mistakes has frightened international markets. The very fact that billions can be drawn by the Mexican central bank to repay private creditors and thus allow them to pull out of pesos means that vast amounts of oew dollars are being pumped into the system. At the same time, the collapse of the peso has spread the contagion throughout South America and on to other developing countries. Not only foreign investors in emerging countries but their own investors as well are selling off their stocks and bonds or liquidating bank de-posits and heading for safety disewhere. This now is bad news for the dollar. In the old days, Latin money fled for afety mostly in Miami and New York.

But when central banks in Latin America supply dollars now for flight capital to take wing, the money also flees to Europe, Asia and of course U.S. investors. Fund managers in London, Zurich and, increasingly, New York as well are not content to take shelter principally in dollars, as Latin Americans once were. A proportion of these dollars will be sold for Deutsche marks, Swiss francs and

yen. Hence, the more dollars pumped

The impact of the Mexican crisis on the dollar has been particularly dramatic because international financial institutions and investors are already nervous. During the past year, markets have been hit by shock after shock, starting with last year's high interest rates and heavy losses from derivatives.

This has been followed by the disappearance of Barings in a single weekend and the specter of Mexico spiraling from investment star to villain in a matter of weeks at a tremendous cost to international investors.

The result is a widespread shift to international assets of the highest quality, and a sharp increase in the demand for much more liquid investments. Treasury bills and government securities are preferred, as well as deposits with a few large international banks.

This flight to safety also prompts a shift by investors back into their home currencies, where they feel most comfortable. Thus, Europeans are moving into Deutsche marks and Swiss francs. Japanese and other investors in Asia are returning to yen.

But about 60 percent of the world's central hank reserves are held in dollars, which is four times the proportion of Deutsche mark assets and six times that of the yen. So even a modest flight from dollars to marks and yen has a big impact on currency values. Proportionately more pouring money into emerging markets at a rate of $100 billion a year and more. Even before the Mexican crisis, this outflow was rapidly decreasing because last year's rising U.S. interest rates made emerging markets look less appealing. A more buoyant bond market also was beginning to attract foreign buyers back to U.S. Treasury bonds, giving the dollar additional support. But the dollar began to skid as the crisis in Mexico escalated.

In the absence of a feeling of security about the stability of markets and finan-cial institutions, the structure of the world's reserves puts the dollar at risk. The dollar's role, as about 60 percent of the world's reserves, far exceeds America's relative position in the world economy, where it accounts for just over 20 percent of total activity. Even including the whole of the dollar bloc in the Americas, the supposedly natural holders of dollars do not add up to anything close to 60 percent of the world economy.

Because America has been running a substantial balance of payments deficit, still more dollars must be absorbed somewhere in the system. So investors outside the dollar bloc have to be persuaded to be willing buyers of dollar assets. This becomes increasingly difficult to achieve, and thus the possibility that they will jump out of dollars at the next shock increases the sense of financial uncertainty.

Unfortunately, there are good reasons. to expect more shocks and alarms in with its corporations deep in dollar debt. Nevertheless, the new Mexican plan is a step in the right direction since it raises confidence and reduces Mexico's need to draw on the $50 billion credit line.

Yet if confidence begins to crode again and new drawings become necessary, the pressure on the dollar can quickly resume. This is why an essential precondition for restoring dollar stability is to resolve Mexico's fundamental problems and not just throw dollars at them. Those who shrug and say "So what?"

to a falling dollar are wrong. A precipi-tous fall in the world's premier reserve and trading currency is very dangerous.

It would be bad for growth because sooner or later the Federal Reserve would be forced to raise interest rates, with effects most likely spilling over into financial markets everywhere. Higher currency values in Europe and Japan would harm those countries' exports. Currency instability would close the capital markets to developing countries, and that would impede growth everywhere. Last but not least, any further fall in the dollar would simply increase the risk of more shocks, giving the downward spiral yet another kick.

Cut Out the Bickering and Give Business a Strong Lead at the WTO

It will be a long haul before the staggeringly large estimated increase in world annual income of $510 hillion that could flow from the Uruguay Round agreements becomes reality. Even the most sanguine predictions do not expect this goal to be attained before 2005 at the earliest.

and there is a vast expanse of uncharted waters in international trade policy to be navigated. It is one thing to agree to the most amhitious trade liheralization package ever attempted, quite another to implement it.

With the growing complexity of international trade, the WTO will have far wider responsibilities than GATT ever had. The WTO's dispute-settlement mechanism will have sharper teeth than GATT's, but it must be respected. This will happen only if governments choose to concede the necessary authority to the WTO, even if decisions go against their short-term national interests. On the WTO's agenda are the stronger rules agreed upon under the Uruguay Round to curb nontariff barriers, limit restrictive conditions on foreign investment, extend better protection for intellectual property rights, and - a major innovation — establish an ongoing process for further liberalizing of trade in services, The WTO is expected to cover this new ground successfully at a time when the much talked about globalization of business is giving rise to new trade tensions. The countries of Eastern and Central Europe complain that they are denied sufficient access for their goods in Western markets. West Europeans fear that competition from Asian producers will de-stroy jobs in their own countries. Another contentious issue that will require careful handling in the WTO is that of trade restrictions to enforce environmental or labor standards, all too easily a pretext for protectionism.

If ever there was a time when the cause of multilateralism in trade needed a resolute champi-

Sensible Expansion of NATO Will Protect Both Europe and America

tional assertions of America's "commitment" to Europe. In the 21st century, Europe will still need the active American involvement that has been a necessary component of the continental balance for half a century. Conversely, an unstable Enrope would still threaten essential national security interests of the United States. This is as true after the Cold War as it was during it.

f do not intend to suggest that nothing has changed. Local con-flicts, internal political and economic instability, and the return of historical grievances have replaced Soviet expansionism as the greatest threat to peace in Europe. oot squandered. The tragedy of Bosnia does not diminish the responsibility to build a new security architecture. As the greatest collective security failure of the West since the 1930s, it only underscores the urgency of that task.

The central security pillar of the new architecture is NATO. Expansion of NATO is a logical and essential consequence of the disappearance of the Iron Curtain and the need to widen European unity based on shared democratic values. NATO has embarked on a two-phase program for 1995. During the first part of this year, NATO is determining through an internal discussion the rationale and process for expanding the new, post-Cold War NATO.

In the months prior to the December 1995 ministerial meeting, NATO's views will be presented individually to members of the Partnership for Peace — the first such detailed discussions on the subject to take place outside the alliance. In December, NATO ministers will review the results of these discussions before deciding how to proceed. Several key points should be stressed:

NATO expansion must strengthen security in the entire region, including nations that are not members.

The rationale and process for the most solemn of commitments: a bilateral defense treaty that extends the U.S. security umbrella to a new nation. This requires ratification by two-thirds of the U.S. Senate, a point that is often overlooked. NATO expansion cannot occur in a vacuum. If it did, it would encourage the very instabilities it was seeking to avoid. In addition to NATO, the new architecture involves the European Union and other arrangements such as the Cooperation in Europe. If the West is to create an enduring and stable security framework for Europe, it must solve the most enduring strategic problem of Europe and integrate the na-tions of the former Soviet Union, especially Russia, into a stable European security system.

Enhancement of stability in Central Europe is a mutual interest of Russia and the United States. NATO, which poses no threat to Russian security, seeks a direct, open relationship with Russia that both recognizes Russia's special position and stature and, reinforces the integrity of the othernewly independent states of the former Soviet Union. Informal discussions on a possible new NATO-Russia relationship, highly preliminary, began in January when Secretary of State Warren Christopher met in Geneva with Foreign Minister Andrei Kozyrev. Any such arrangements must coosider the special case of Ukraine. Its geostrategic position makes its independence and integrity a critical element of Euro-;

Give That Chernobyl Burden Away

ARIS — The ghost of Chernobyl, site of the worst civilian ouclear accident in history, hannis Europe. Unless it is banished, economic reform may be threatened in Ukraine, and with it the country's independence and emhryonic democracy.

The explosion and fire at the power plant in 1986, which sent radioactive smoke as far north as Sweden, could strike again, for the disaster disclosed serious flaws in the design of the two reactors still in service. Today the giant cement and pall over the economic program of President Leonid Kuchma. Since his election in July, the government has taken decisive steps to reverse the hyper-inflation, depressioo and pauperiza-tion that followed independence in 1991. ft is a staggering task. The average wage is $27 a month, and 40 percent of all workers are underemployed. Many city dwellers survive on vegetables grown in family gar-more than that $1.5 billion. It needs $5.3 billion in aid to finance its trade delicit and to pay off parts of loans from Russia and Turkmenistan. The Chernobyl problem is stalling an international effort to put together a second loan package.

The European Union is balking, ft has not released $100 million it conditionally agreed to lend Ukraine in 1994, and will not consider a 1995 loan until its conditions are met. The main condition is that Ukraine close Chernobyl, which provides 7 percent of the nation's energy. Environmental-ists in Germany want it closed.

So does France's nuclear power industry, because accidents galvanize foes of such power. And so do the Ukrainian people. Why can't the Europeans and Ukrainians agree? The problem goes beyond the energy shortfall that a shutdown would cause. Once the remaining reactors are turned off, Chernobyl has to be cleaned up, and the reactor waste and contaminated machinery have to be disposed of safely. The cost of such a cleanup is unknown. A minimum estimate, hy the World Bank, is $2 billion over 10 years. What is clear is that Ukraine cannot afford it --- be befuddled by these paper assets, whose U.S. buyers are said to have iosi $13 billion last year.

But derivatives are no more mysterious than anything else gamblers thight bet on. Mr. Leeson is British and the British are, among their many charms, a nation of gamblers. When that passion can be slaked on racehorses or soccer games you know, at least, what the odds and risks are. Racehorses and soccer teams usually run to form.

Despite the incalculable risks, however, derivatives have been palmed off on gullible investors not as esoteric bets concocted with computers, which they are, but as legiti-mate investments, which they are not. A friend asks: "If you buy derivatives and lose money on them, what exactly do you lose and who pays?" Good questions. The answer is that derivatives are mere numbers in cyberspace, no more valuable than the good faith of the vendor or the buck of whatever trend you bet on, Sellers of derivatives, like the managers of gambling casinos, are making a great deal of money; buyers, like those who play the bouse at casinos, tend to lose losing. It is still as

P. T. Barnum said. Is no one protecting the suckers, even when they gamble with public funds — as Orange County, Califor-nia, did? You might have assumed that such risk-taking had been discredited forever in the crash of 1929 and that in America the securities laws would provide protection. But these ingenious devices for bilking the naive are rather like the designer drugs that slip by the narcotics laws. When I was studying economics, and reading books like Frederick

As for the dollar, its recent vul-nerability to speculative assault would have been easily explained under the old rules. Americans for years have been running chronic balance of payments deficits in the range of $100 billion a year, exporting dollars in vast amounts. Only because the dollar has been favored in the international oil trade, and because the Arab oil-producing states tend to recycle oil dollars, as antomobile dollars are by the Japanese, has the greenback held up against hard currencies which are less lavishly spread about.

But when the United States decided as an emergency measure to anchor the faltering Mexican peso to the dollar, it tied a stricken currency to a troubled currency, with results that might have been predicted. The speculators moved in.

Reserve currencies once drew strength from the sponsoring gov-ernment's willingness to take drastic measures -- exchange controls, high interest rates (even at severe domestic cost) and the massive purchase of the currency when under attack — to punish speculators. These old techniques came to a sort of symbolic end some months ago when the British government hlew a vast war chest trying to defend the pound against a similar attack.

The old defensive techniques now have almost no effect on speculators. In the world of the electronic superhighway, with the planet swamped with money, currency speculators can make such profits on minuscule daily fluctuations in exchange rates that they are immune to government defenses.

That being the case, the dollar and other currencies are putty in the speculators' hands and will be unless a substitute can be devised for the pegged currency values that Washngton tossed casually aside for the brave new world of the "float" some 20 years ago. As with derivatives, it would appear that there was wisdom in certain old lessons of finance we

Brakes on Development

Regarding the Copenhagen summit for social development, is there a chance, realistically, that the industrialized world can lift the Third World countries into the industrial age?

All industrial countries together represent less than 20 percent of the global population. So for each person in the developed world, four other people are asking for support. And only China among the major developing countries has taken serious steps to limit its growth rate.

The grain surpluses of North America, Australia and New Zealand are just sufficient to cover the deficit in the Third World. There is not enough energy and arable land to extend this figure at the rate required by present population growth trends.

Without a strong commitment from the developing countries and drastic measures to curb population growth while enhancing education, the situation is sure to deteriorate.

Mexico, Maize and Debt

The article "A New Slant on the Origins of Agriculture" (Features, March 9) by John Noble Wilford throws into tragic relief the situation in Mexico today.

Maize was first domesticated in the Tehuácan valley of Central America. Today, thanks to neoli-beral policies imposed first hy the International Monetary Fund, Mexicans are no longer self-suffi-goods be lifted. As a result, Mexico's undercapitalized and impoverished agricultural sector was forced to compete with the highly subsi-dized U.S. agricultural sector. With the undermining of its domestic agricultural sector, and with a rise in essential imports, Mexico, like many Third World countries, is moving further into dependency and debt. It is today unable to feed its own people. Almost 20 percent of the population has no casb income; more than 40 percent make less than the minimum wage of $3 per day.

It is no wonder then that Mexico is in a state of political and economic turbulence. The wonder is that the bungry people of Mexico have not rebelled before.

No to a New 'Community'

Regarding the editorial "An Atlannc Community" (Feb. 14):

Perhaps you missed the November elections in the United States, where people voted to reduce the size of government, not make it bigger and more distant. Possibly you have not noticed European leaders telling their electorates that they will be more cautious ahout European integration. You might not have noticed the World Health Organization backpedaling furiously, trying to be more responsive and less prescriptive. Or the fact that GATT has opened up trade worldwide, reducing the need for other economic agreements, 1 don't think Europeans or Americans are in dire need of more government.

You have proposed an "Atlantic Community," hut you have de-scribed an Atlantic Bureaucracy. With the glohal banking and market system in place now, there is no need for another organization to "coordinate" economic policy. In foreign policy, recent successes by the United States and NATO have come from ad hoc coalitions. A "community" consists of people or nations with common interests; you have proposed a group of states with common institutions. Even if the people were to accept such a notion, it would slow things down, not make them better.

Except for the Super Bowl and the copyrights in late-late movies, Roman numerals have gone the way of long-playing phonograph records and rotary-dial telephones. And in an industry where the numbers that matter most involve circulation and advertising linage, the 50,000th issue is the journalistic equivalent of a car odometer's rolling over. The day will be noted in passing at The New York Times. The newspaper is preparing to commemorate the 100th anniversary of Adolph S. Ochs's purchase of the paper next year.

"The best way we can celebrate" No. 50,000, Arthur Ochs Sulzberger, the chairman of The New York Times Co., said on Monday in a memorandum to the staff, "is by ensuring that our 50,001st edition is the best newspaper we can possibly produce." He added: "I'll fax you another memo when our 75,000th edition comes out."

Still, 50,000 is a lot of anything. It is the number of copies of John Steinbeck's "Grapes of Wrath" sold every year in the United States, and the number of copies of Conrad Hilton's autohiography, "Be My Guest," stolen every year from botel rooms around the world, the number of rhinestones that were in Liberace's grand piano, and the number of customers who crowd into Harrods in London every day.

If all 50,000 issues of The New York Times were stacked in a single pile, one copy apiece, they would be roughly 300 feet (90 meters) taller than the Empire State Building, or 200 feet taller than one of the twin

No. 10,000, on Sept. 24, 1883, reported that J. P. Morgan's yacht had sunk. That issue had eight pages and a newsstand price of 2 cents. The daily-and-Sunday subscription price in those days was $7.50 a year. Vol. 1, No. 1 of The New-York Daily Times, as the newspaper was known, cost only a penny when it appeared on Sept. 18, 1851. There were no Sunday issues until No. 2,990 on April 21, 1861. But each day brought a new number, and the continuity was preserved even when the paper was not published. After strikes in 1923, 1953 and 1958, special sections were printed containing pages that had been made up when the paper was not published.

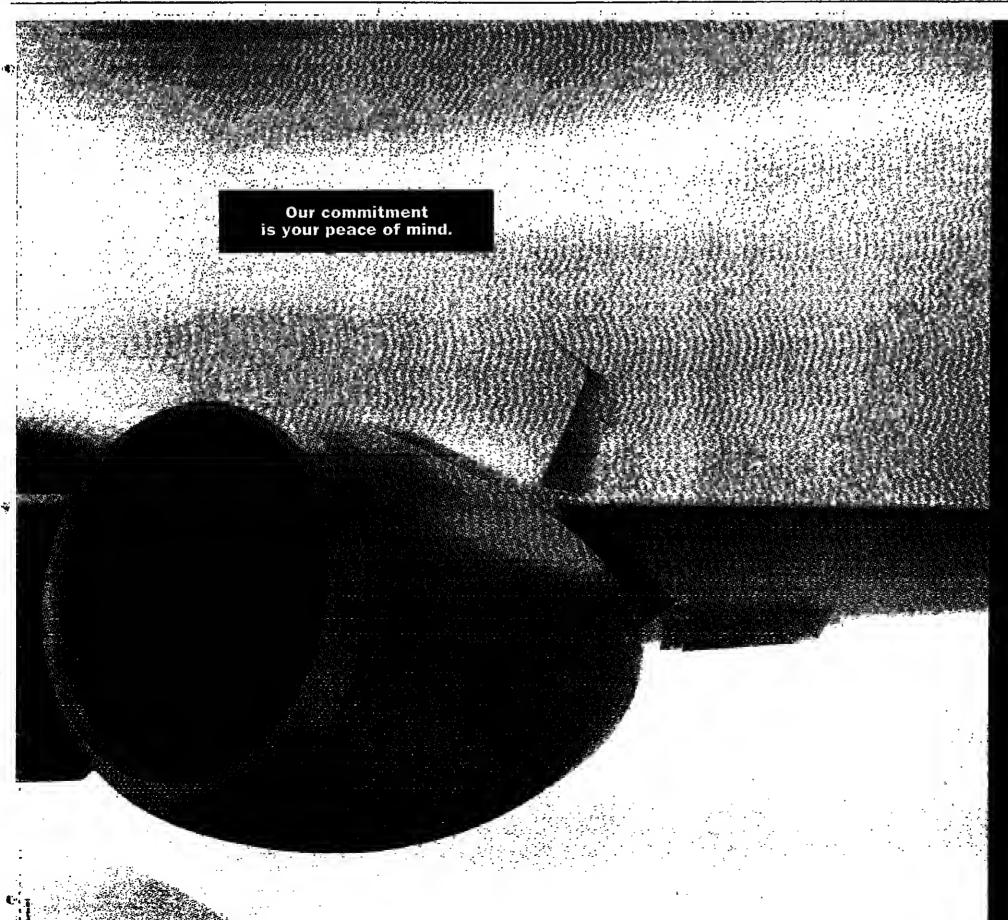

Continuity was also preserved during a 114-day strike in 1962 and 1963. The New York Times's West Coast edition kept the numbers going. In 1965, when a 24-day strike halted The New York Times' operations New York, its international edition in Paris kept publishing. That justified keeping the numbers going, even though the international edition had its own different sequence.

No attempt at continuity was made during an $8-day strike in 1978. By then, The New York Times had suspended its international edition and become a partner in the International Herald Tribune. The last issue of The New York Times before the strike was No. 44,027. The first issue after the strike was No. 44,028.

The New York Times is one of the last papers in America to print the volume number (in Roman numerals) and the issue number (in Arabic) on its front page. # Tough and Tender: Boulez at 70

By David Stevens

ARIS --- When Pierre Boulez sliced symbolically into an elaborate pastry construction the other evening at the Théâtre des Champs-Elysées. the cake was topped by a reproduction of the opening bars of his "Improvisation sur Mallarmé III," which he had just conducted -along with works by Berg and Stravinsky - with the London Symphony Orchestra.

Actually, be was jumping the gun on his 70th birthday, which is not until March 26. But on that day he will be at the Cité de la Musique conducting "Rituel in Memoriam Maderna" on a multicultural program shared with a Japanese Gagaku orchestra.

This birthday year is shaping up as one of his busiest, at least in public. He and the ISO have interested in busiles.

LSO have just completed, in both London and Paris, a set of six concerts. Each concert included a work by Boulez and music of composers be has persistently championed — Debussy, Ravel, Stravinsky, Bartok, Webern and Berg.

Around these concerts have been films, dehates and discussions, mini-master-classes with young conductors and composers, and composer-meets-the-public sessions. Key subjects dealt with the composer and poets (Char, Mallarme, Cummings) and painters (Klee, Kandinsky).

The show goes on into fune, mostly with the LSO, touching base in Chicago, New York, Vienna, Linz, Tokyo, Brussels and Lyon. Then Boulez opens the fall season of the Netherlands Opera, with Schoenberg's
"Moses und Aron," staged by Peter Stein, a co-production with the Salzburg Festival.
It is hard to think of a musician who has had more of an impact, or a more durable impact, on the artistic/political life his country. This has less to do with the com-poser than with the conductor, organizer, teacher, and oare-knuckles polemicist.

He has played a determining role in three major musical institutions created in the last quarter-century. After years of alienation from French musical life, he was lured back by Georges Pompidou to create the research institute IRCAM as an integral part of what became the Centre Pompidou.

He was in on the planning of the Opéra Bastille, where his advice has so far been largely neglected, and the new Cité de la Musique, which owes a lot to his ideas, and also has provided a home for the Ensemble Intercontemporain, the free-form orchestra of which he is president.

His public personality has both tough and tender aspects. Although he is no longer the fire-breathing modernist of the postwar years, he is still capable of an attack on the Enemy that can make even a neutral observer cringe. In a meet-the-public session Saturday, with a public of several hundred, be was all witty amiability. with only an occasional dig.

E jumped quickly from one ques-oon to another, discoursing on the relative merits of French and German bassoons ("a typical French dispute"), on average programming and repertory ("lazy" and "no great imagination"), on modernity in music (he identified two lines of descent, one from Debussy, one from Schoenberg). The great advantage of the Cité de la Musique, be said, was that it was not just a concert hall, but a complex of ancillary services in an ambience "that does not intimidate people or make them feel like imbeciles." To one question about Boulez as composer he said, "That's for you

The conductor, in these concerts, also shows two aspects. His podium manner is lean and direct, but the results can be anything but dry. He wrung extraordinary intensity from Webern's Opus 6 orchestra pieces, and such 20th-century warhorses as Bartók's "Miraculous Mandarin" and Stravinsky's "Rite of Spring" got performances of tremendous impact, and splendidly alert playing from the orchestra.

He was a sympathetic accompanist for Daniel Barenboim's muscular attack on Bartók's first piano concerto, for Jessye Norman's lush singing of two sets of Berg songs, for Anne-Sophie Monter's eloquent Berg violin concerto, as for Kynng-Wha Chung's vivid and gutsy account of Bartók's second violin concerto.

As for the composer, Boulez seems far from saying the final word. Five of the six works played in these programs have un-dergone revision and rethinking, sometimes more than once. The most extreme case is "Notations," the transformation of some laconic 1945 piano pieces into a kind of opulent orchestral showpiece.

Meanwhile, at the Cité de la Musique, the Ensemble Intercontemporain under David Robertson (the young Californian chosen by Boulez as its music director three years ago) had a huge public success with one of the more or less simultaneous world premieres (the others were in London and Frankfurt) of Steve Reich's "City Life."

The work, for winds, percussion and digital synthesizers, is a kind of five-movement symphony. It makes musical material out of spoken phrases, heartbeats, pile drivers and other city noises. The range is from fairly amiable daytime bustle to sinis-ter, smoke-filled night. It all seemed to go down well, and Robertson and his troops

A Snag in the Rattigan Revival

By Sheridan Morley
International Herald Tribune

ONDON — "In Praise of Lore" (Apollo Shaftesbury) will do little 10 keep the Rattigan revival bandwagon on the rails. Originally seen in 1973 as a one-actor called "After Lydia," it was then unwisely ex-panded to full length at the demand of Rex Harrison.

He is also, in a way, its central character, since the play concerns his relation-ship with Kay Kendall, when both of them knew she was dying of leukemia but entered an unspoken, infinitely English, conspiracy of tight lips to keep the news from each other.

As usual Rattigan is writing about the "English disease" of emotional suppression and understatement, but with none of the power of "The Deep Blue Sea" and Separate Tables."

Peter Bowles and Lisa Harrow are adequate in an otherwise inadequate staging. At the Old Vic, Judd Hirsch dominates with hlazing stagecraft Herb Gardner's "Conversations With My Father," a Broadway award-winner that most resembles several episodes of "Cheers" bolted together with half-remembered bits of Arthur Miller's and Eugene coward had spent time in Paris in 1939 and again in 1945 and was intrigued by the O'Neill's and even William Saroyan's har-stool nostalgia.

But the problem with "Conversations" is that it is referential and reverential without having a lot that is new to say. In that sense it may well be very typical of tavern talk, but there is almost no central

Family skeletons are fleshed out, color-ful characters arrive to enliven the scene (I am especially fond of Trevor Martin as the 90-year-old Yiddish theater veteran with his 12-minute version of "The Dyb-buk"), hut in the end it is Hirsch and Hirsch alone who keeps this bar open all hours. Alan Ayckbourn is the director making valiant attempts to persuade us, albeit unsuccessfully, that there is a play as well as a performance here.

Originally entitled "What If?," and seldom revived in the half-century since it was written and briefly staged, Noël Coward's "Peace in Our Time" remains one of his most intriguing if uncharacteristic dramas. Currently revived by The Tomring Partnership (Cardiff, Norwich, Bath, Newscott through April) it offers a cost Newcastle through April), it offers a cast of 30 in a wartime London, which we discover early in the first scene is under varying behavior of his friends there.

"Worse things than bombardment," he wrote in his diary, "can happen to a city in wartime," and the thing he had in mind was, of course, collaboration. He saw Chevalier, Guitry, Chanel accused with varying degrees of accuracy, and began to won-der how Londoners would have reacted to

"Peace in Our Time" is raw, angry and thrilling: The cleached cigarette holders are still there, and the acid wit, and the fervent belief in the patriotism of the middle classes under pressure. But there's also a sense of action adventure that you will only find elsewhere in his film "In Which We Serve" and maybe "Cavalcade": The idea of a nation at breaking point, summoning up resources it never knew it had and almost let slip until too

Churchill shot, the royal family under guard and Hitler driving up the Mall had all been real possibilities a couple of years before this play was written, and what could now be no more than a period curiosity is given life by Coward's curious mastery of crowd scenes and sudden, searing insights into old, established London patterns of survival and success against the odds.

Wyn Jones's epic production urgently deserves a central London showing.

Blues Guitar With a Cajun Accent

By Mike Zwerin International Herald Tribone

ARIS — Born in Mississippi, Sonny Landreth grew up and lives in Lafayette, southwestern Louisiana, the capital of Cajun culture. He finger-picks a guitar with his right hand like Chet Atkins and frets with a bottleneck on his left pinky. Nobody has ever done exactly that quite that way. Before stretching the envelope, he cut his teeth writing his own songs, playing and singing them with bands, booking his own gigs, getting the sound system together, putting up posters and driving the van. He produced and paid for his own records and personally delivered them to local stores. He once almost made Leon Russell miss his bus by trying to hustle a demo. Free enterprise. God Bless America. Along the way the Cajun culture got under his skin.

Cajuns are descendants of the Acadians, who emigrated from France to what is now Nova Scotia in the 17th century. Expelled in 1755 hy the British, some sailed to Louisiana, where they were called Cajuns by natives mispronouncing "Acadian."

In the 1970s, young Europeans revived the music of their ancestors. Zachary Richard, with whom Landreth worked for an extended period of time, fused Cajun, country and rock music, singing in French. Many older Cajuns were illiterate; muband would play a two-step and a waltz twist on music you've already heard: "I did And the Red Hot Louisiana Band.

What Happened to Liner Notes?

By Marc Fisher

TASHINGTON — Used to be you could read about music before you bought it. The back covers of record alhums -- nearly all jazz and classical albums, but some pop LPs as well — offered liner notes, essays of history, biograpby and musicology.

At their best, they mixed hip hype, reporting and analysis, somehow capturing the feel of the sounds within.

Liner notes lured and taught the novice. They made decjays sound smart. In jazz especially, what the finest notes did was transform a musical moment into a document, giving an evanescent performance a place in history.

The first generation of classi-cal CD-ROMs has much to offer. On "Multimedia Schubert: The Trout Quintet," critic Alan Rich, a veteran liner note writer, offers hundreds of pages of history, biography, analysis and even a quiz-ail equally accessible to novice and expert. The Macintosh version even includes recipes for cooking trout.

The snazzy graphics do not exist for the sake of flash alone; on some disks, a listener can watch the score as it plays. On others, the structure of a piece comes to life in all manner of ingenious ways.

Click on one button and hear the theme extracted from severplaces in different movements. Click elsewhere and even the newcomer can hear a dramatic key change because the word HERE! flashes on the screen as it happens.

It's a terrific teaching tool, but it's also fun enough to snare the casual listener. At least that's the goal.

But customers willing to plunk down $25 to $60 for CD-ROMs are not the same folks who formerly discovered a new musician by casually picking up an album in a music shop. The concept of an easy, quick, literate guide to music before purchase appears to be lost for good.

SAS Gives Nod to Boeing

Compiled by Our Staff From Disputches STOCKHOLM - Scandingvian Airlines System said Tuesday it would buy 35 Boeing 737-600s from Boeing Co. for $1.2 billion, the largest order SAS has ever placed and the largest for Boeing in a year and a half.

The Scandinavian flag carrier said it had taken options to buy a further 35 planes, giving the entire deal a potential value of $2.4 billion. The initial deliveries are scheduled to come in the second half of 1998.

The order also meant SAS had snubbed McDonnell Douglas Corp., a long-time partner.

"The decision marks the start of a gradual phasing out of the Fokker 28 and McDonnell Douglas DC-9 aircraft in the SAS fleet," the airline said.

Boeing shares surged as misch as $2.75, to $49.25, in New York trading while Mc-Donnell Douglas stock dropped $2, to $55.125.

The airline also announced Tuesday that it posted a pretax profit in 1994 of 1.5 billion kronor ($206.5 million), a sharp turnaround from a loss of 492 million kronor in 1993. Group operating profit after depreciation surged to 1.39 billion kronor from 249 million.

The airline also said that it expected "continued improvement in results for 1995." Sales fell by almost 6 percent, to 36.89 billion kronor.

The SAS order came one day after Japan Air Lines placed a $180 million order for four Boeing 737s.

In 1994 Boeing scored major orders from Singapore Airlines and Sandia Airlines, although the Saudi order is oot yet firm.

SAS said last week it had also considered orders from Mc-Donnell Douglas, Fokker, Brit-ish Aerospace PLC and Airbus Industrie before deciding in favor of Boeing. shoomberg, Reuters, AP, APP) the U.S. economy was on target straight record, while the Nas-

Argentine Firms Pitch In $1 Billion Loan Offered to Government

BUENOS AIRES - A group of Argentina's largest companies announced Tuesday they would lend the government $1 billioo to help it through the present financial crisis.

The loan is contingent on the Internacional Monetary Fund approving Argentina's re-quest for $2.42 billion this year from an existing extended fund facility. The government announced late Monday that it had reached a preliminary accord with the IMF to obtain that amount.

However, the IMF deal hinges on the government getting Congress to approve an emergency fiscal package that calls for $3.51 billion in new taxes and $997 million in spending cuts. Congress was scheduled to begin debating the issue early Wednesday.

Eduardo Casabal, vice president of Com-pania Naviera Perez Compano SA, the second-largest Argentine oil company, said: "As of now, we have confirmed more than half of the loan amount, and we can assume the full amount will be raised during this week."

Press reports said some of the companies involved were the oil concern Astra SA; Bunge & Born SA, a grain exporter, Casa Tia SA, a retailer, Cerveceria Quilmes SA, the country's largest brewer, Sociedad Comercial del Plata SA, a holding company; Loma Negra SA, the country's top cement producer; the telephone monopolies Telecom SA and Telefonica de Argentina SA, and Perez Companc SA. The daily Ambito Financiero reported that the companies would purchase a 2-year bond. Instead of receiving interest and principal payments, the companies will charge the amount against their future tax obligations.

■ Mexico's Search for New Capital

Lawrence Malkin of the International Her-ald Tribune reported from New York; Mexico has no intention of repeating its mistakes by courting fickle short-term foreign capital anew but will try to finance its growth with more of its own savings, direct foreign investment, and medium-term bonds, Finance Minister Guillermo Ortiz said Tuesday.

In a series of presentations in New York on Mexico's austerity program, he outlined a complex plan for bailing out the banking system without printing money and a short, sharp squeeze aimed at slashing last year's huge balance-of-payments deficit from 8 percent of its economy almost to zero by the end of this year.

All this assumes, he said, the peso floating around 6 to the dollar and a one-time inflation bubble of 42 percent that is expected to subside later this year as the economy absorbs the highimport cost of devaluation. In late New York trading on Tuesday, the dollar was rising against the peso, up 15 centavos on the day at

France Fears Crédit Lyonnais Embezzlement

Agence France-Presse
PARIS — Prime Minister

Edouard Balladur Tuesday ordered an investigation on Tuesday into possible fraud at Credit Lyonnais as huge losses were revealed at the troubled stateowned bank.

The order marked the first time that French officials had mentioned possible criminal activity in the Credit Lyonnais debacle. It also came with Mr. Balladur facing an uphill battle in a presidential election campaign increasingly marked by outrage over corruption and sloppy management of staterun enterprises.

Economics Minister Edmond Alphandéry said on French television that the bank's accumulated losses were about 50 billion francs ($9.97 billion).

Speaking in an interview with France 2 television, Mr. Al-phandery said, "There appears to have been embezzlement." "If there has been embezzlement, these offenses will be systematically prosecuted and punished in the courts," he said, In a statement, Mr. Balladur said he had ordered Mr. Alphandery to investigate the

The government's actioo Tuesday came just hours after a new political broadside over the Crèdit Lyonnais debacle. François d'Aubert, a key figure in a parliamentary panel that investigated Credit Lyonnais's finances last year, demanded that the French judicial system be brought into the fray and that parliament be called into special session. "Those responsible for the disaster have had no worries," he said, adding that the parliamentary commission had been "fonled" by the former Credit Lyonnais chairman Yves Haberer, who was named to head the bank in 1989 by the then-Socialist government.

The commission reported in July 1994 that Mr. Haberer bore most of the blame for the bank's losses but also said that the government had acted in an "ambiguous" manner in its role as share-holder.

The chairman of the commission, Philippe Seguin, said at the time that Mr. Haberer's ethics were beyond reproach but that his financial acumen was oot.

Mr. Haberer was removed as chairman in a reorganization of the state-owned financial sector in November 1993, taking over the leadership of Credit National, a much smaller institution.

Last year, Credit Lyonnais reported that in 1993 it had a loss of 6.9 billioo francs. The state then provided new capital of 3.5 billion francs and guaranteed nonperforming loans of

Outsize Antes in Australia Cable Fight

By Michael Richardson
International Herald Tribuse

SYDNEY -At first glance, the financial calculations of the two main groups vying to bring cable television to Austra-lia's 6 million households seem bizarre.

The local and foreign media and telecommunication companies in the rival consortiums are committed to spend at least 8 billion Australian dollars ($5.97 billion) total to set up a cable industry that some analysts say will generate annnal sales of no more than 1.4 billion dollars by 2004.

That assumes Australian viewers will respond with the same enthusiasm as their counterparts in the United States, where 65 percent of households with access to cable television subscribe.

Mark Booth, a former head of MTV in Europe who was recently made chief executive of the Foxtel consortium, said he believed there was pent-up demand in Australia for cable TV, which was Australia for cable TV, which was banned by the government until last year to protect over-the-air broadcasters.

"Australians travel. They know what they've been missing," he said. "The research is probably underestimating the level of interest people have because they are not really sure what they can get."

But the response to Australia's first subscription service, which Australia Media Ltd. launched in January with eight channels beamed by satellite, has hardly been overwhelming. By early March, it had only 3,000 subscribers. Australis is 20 percent owned by the U.S. cable-TV oper-

Robert Peters, a media analyst at ANZ

Capel Court securities, said it was too early to know whether either of the groups could make money. "The industry is too uncertain at the moment," be added. Mr. Booth said that when Foxtel begins its cable service in the third quarter, it will be offering about 150 channels, 120 of them devoted to movies and the rest to news, current affairs, sport, childrens programs, documentaries and education.

Australia's other main cable operator, Optus Vision, is controlled by Optus Communications, Telstra's chief rival as a telephone service provider in Australia; the American-based Continental Cablevision Inc. and Publishing & Broadcasting ninth-month low.

The group plans to launch its cable service late this year. Unlike Foxtel, it will initially offer analog not digital connection. Analog technology can fit no more than 64 channels on fiber-optic cable.

If it works, Foxtel's digital system promises to give higher quality sound and vision. It also would carry 500-plus channels as well as interactive programs from its first day of operation, although it will be several years before such programs as video-on-demand and home shopping or banking are technically viable.

Mr. Booth said that although it would he the first time the digital system had been used for commercial cable television, he had "complete confidence" it would work, giving the group and important edge in market penetration.

Cable TV is clearly just the opening abitation in the way for control of the new skirmish in the war for control of the new media and communications world that is being created by the convergence of telephony, entertainment and computers.

Analysts estimate that Australia-based local and long-distance telephone services will be worth 30 billion Australian dollars by 2004, double their value this year. Gerry Moriarty, Telstra's director of network operations, said that while cable TV was "certainly not a sideshow" for Foxtel, it was just "the first stage of our plans for a fully interactive broadband network, offering everything from tele-phony to multimedia services."

Cessna Is Returning to Small Planes

WICHITA, Kansas (AP) — Cessna Aircraft Co. said Tuesday that it will resume manufacturing small planes in mid-1996 after a 10-year break prompted by spiraling liability claims.

The company will produce four varieties of single-engine planes at a new plant in Independence, Kansas, and hopes that by 1998 it will be turning out 2,000 of them a year.

Cessna halted single-engine aircraft production in 1986 because of lawspits arising from plane grashes. At its peak in 1977, it of lawsuits arising from plane crashes. At its peak in 1977, it produced 8,893 planes. Cessna's return to small planes was prompted by a law Congress passed last fall that freed manufacturers from liability claims arising from crashes involving planes more than 18 years old.

AXA's Equitable May Sell Donaldson

PARIS (AFX) - AXA SA said its Equitable Cos. is studying the possible sale of its subsidiary Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette Securities Corp. But it added that there are no potential buyers. An Equitable spokesman refused to give a possible asking price for DLJ, saying the question was most because the company was not in talks with a buyer. DLJ posted a 1994 net profit of $123 million and has a book value of $800 million.

Mr. Rais is to be sentenced wednesday. The banker moved to France shortly after Carrian's collapse. He was extradited last year to stand trial in what has become Hong Kong's longest and most expensive legal case.

The prosecutor, Martin Wilson, told a High Court hearing that Mr. Rais was one of several executives who exposed the bank to catastrophic return for his guilty plea.

West German Price Data Raises Inflation Fears

BONN - Wholesale prices in Western Germany showed their biggest rise in more than five years in February, the Federal Statistics Office said Tuesday, triggering fears that inflationary pressures could be building up.

The wholesale price index rose 0.7 percent in February from January and was 3.4 percent higher than in January 1994.

That was the highest year-on-year rise since December 1989. December 1994 and January 1995 had annual changes of 3.2 percent, both well above the 1.6 percent average of 1994 and indicating a clear acceleration in wholesale prices. Economists said the figures could be an early warning that a pickup in inflation is looming in Germany, which is recovering from one of its worst recessions since World War II. "The figures show there is a lot of inflationary pressure in the pipeline from raw material price rises and the strong industrial recovery of 1994," said Joachim Fels of Goldman, Sachs & Co. in Frankfurt. "This means the trend to lower consumer price inflation has been broken," he added. "If pressure on exchange rates eases, the Bundesbank may have to put interest rates up." The independent central bank is fiercely committed to maintaining stable prices and might decide to raise interest rates if it fears a resurgence of inflation.

Julian Jessop of HSBC Markets in London said that although the wholesale price figures were often erratic, they could not be ignored, as the Bundesbank regarded them as a key indicator of inflation.

Holger Fahrinkrug of UBS Ltd. in Frankfurt said the data were clearly above market forecasts of a monthly rise of between zero and 0.5 percent. But he was not convinced that this alone pointed to a clear inflation threat.

■ Bank of Spain Nudges Up Interest Rate

The Bank of Spain boosted its benchmark interest rate by half of a percentage point, to 8.50 percent, in an effort to quell rising prices, which climbed by a higher-than-expected 0.5 percent in February, Bloomberg Business News reported from Madrid.

The increase in the benchmark rate, the second this year, was seen as an effort to rein in prices without giving the impression that the central bank was trying to use monetary policy to support the peseta. Some analysts expected the interest rate would rise I percent even if February's inflation came in at the 0.3 percent many had forecast.

EU Refuses to Ban Open-Skies Pacts

By Tom Buerkle International Herald Tribune

BRUSSELS — The European Union rejected an attempt in stop the United States from reaching "open-skies" aviation agreements with individual European governments on Tuesday, as Britain and several smaller EU states resisted a common negotiating stance.

Transportation ministers agreed to speed up efforts to define a coherent policy toward the United States and ordered their civil aviation directors to report back in June, but they rejected a French proposal that would have prevented any country from concluding an npen-skies deal with Washington until such a policy was established.

Transportation Minister Brian Mawhinney of Britain said the French proposal was "not only not acceptable, it was not

Strangely, At Saatchi 1994 Was A Fine Year

By Erik Ipsen International Herald Tribune

LONDON - Saatchi & Saatchi PLC announced Tuesday that 1994 was a very good year, until the end. Saatchi's pretax profit soared

69 percent in a performance that company executives conceded would not be matched this year.

After the dismissal of Maurice Saatchi in December and the subsequent defection of a number of senior executives and key clients, Saatchi's chief executive, Charlie Scott, admitted Tuesday that the advertising conglomerate had suffered setbacks in its quest to reinvent itself.

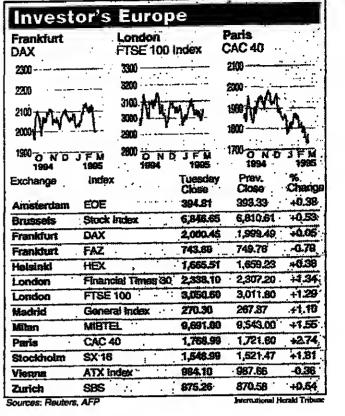

"It has been an eventful and difficult three months for everyone associated with the company," said Mr. Scott, the acting chairman. He said that three months ago he was still planning to recommend the company pay a dividend for 1994, but that the idea has been dropped.

Bayer's net profit rose 47 percent to 2.01 billion DM ($1.43 billion) from 1.37 billion DM in 1993. Pretax profit climbed 40 per-He also noted that the com-1994 would not be realized.

> Those disappointments were instigated by the loss last month of Mars Inc., the candy maker that was Saatchi's largest ac-count. The loss will deny the company £30 million ($48 million) in revenue this year.

But executives at Ted Bates Worldwide Inc., Saatchi's U.S. arm, reported that in the first two months of 1995 they had already won new business that represents half of the billings lost by the defection of Mars. Chief among the new accounts is a worldwide contract for Lucky Strike cigarettes.

While Mr. Scott expressed regret over the client defections, he maintained the company may be better off without some of the "teamwork" now pervades interested in the idea that one or two people are critical," he said.

Very briefly:

 International Nederlanden Groep NV announced Tuesday that it plans to start talks soon with Budapest Bank. Credit Suisse decided Monday not to bid for the bank, citing difficulties in integrating it into the Swiss group.

 Medeva PLC reported Tuesday that 1994 pretax rose 35 percent, to £64 million ($102 million). Medeva raised its dividend payout to 3.3 pence per share, from 2.7 pence.

• Skandia Foersackrings AB, Scandinavia's largest insurer, posted an operating loss of 187 million Swedish kronor ($25.7 million) in 1994 after large losses on its securities holdings. Profit from insurance operations almost dnubled, to 1 billion kronor, from 533 million kronor.

• Banco di Napoli SpA said Tuesday that it lost 995 billion lire ($583.4 million) in 1994. The bank, Italy's seventh-largest, had a profit of 173 billion lire in 1993 and 208 billion lire in 1992. It is 12 percent-owned by the state. British retailers generally saw sales fall in February, as consumer

Attendance Up As Disney Park Seeks Break-Even

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches MARNE-LA-VALLEE, France - Attendance is "significantly up" at Disneyland Paris this year, and the company, Euro Disney SCA, aims to get back to the break-even point this year, its officers said Tuesday.

"What we have said is attendance is up, and that continues to be true," the president, Steve Burke, said, comparing 1995 results with those of last year. He did not give specific figures.

"We are very optimistic about the future," he said, adding that price cuts due April 1 and the June opening of the Space Mountain attraction "ought to help us continue on this momentum.

Managing Director Philippe Bourguignon told the annual shareholders' meeting that the 22 percent cut in high-season admission was expected to attract 500,000 more visitors this year.

The finance director, Xavier de Mexerac, said he expected the copmany to reach break-even by. the end of the 1995-96 financial (Reuters, AFP)

BASF and Bayer Post Hefty 1994 Gains

LEVERKUSEN, Germany - Preliminary 1994 earnings reports from Bayer AG and BASF AG rounded out the picture of industry recovery presented in earlier reports from Germany's other blue-chip chemical makers.

Bayer's 47 percent jump in net profit and 40 percent rise in pretax profit fell within expectations for a solid 1994 performance. But it was BASF's 50 percent net profit jump and near doubling of pretax profit that inspired more enthusiasm among analysts.

"It was way above expectations, and apparently for simple reasons: bigger volume, Bayer's and BASF's shares were up all day and closed 2.67 percent and 2.92 percent higher, respectively, after a slow start. Some analysts said the gains were limited by investors' concerns about the strong Deutsche mark.

Earlier reports from Germany's other leading chemical makers, including Hoechst AG, Degussa AG, and Henkel AG, cited rising demand and at least stabilizing selling prices in 1994 earnings growth.

But economists said the figures did not signal the start of a long-term rising trend in the trade surplus.

The figures in the next few months are likely to be a bit irregular as a result of January's Kobe earthquake," said Hidehiro lwaki, senior economist at Nomura Research Institute.

In January, Japan's trade sur-plus fell 52.3 percent, in part because of difficuloes in getting goods out of Kobe port. Imports, however, were diverted to undamaged ports.

Japan's customs-cleared trade surplus widened to $11.46 billion in Fehruary, from $10.89 hillion a year earlier, the Finance Ministry said.

In Fehruary, the ministry said, imports jumped 27.8 percent from a year earlier, to

■ Steel Output Keeps Rising Japanese steel production rose in February for the seventh consecutive month over a year earlier, bearing out projections of better times to come for the naoon's top steelmakers, Bloomberg Business News reported from Tokyo.

Crude steel production rose 12.3 percent from February 1994, to 8.13 million metric tons, Japan's Iron & Steel Federation said Tuesday. The rise follows a jump of 14.7 percent in January. The figures come a week after many of Japan's steelmakers, including Nippon Steel Corp., Ka-wasaki Steel Corp. and Sumi-tomo Metal Industries Ltd. released earnings forecasts for the year ending March 31 showing heavy losses in the previous year. The improved outlook is a direct benefit of restructuring plans forced on the companies $23.90 hillion, and exports rose by four years of falling earnings.

A Payback for Trade Pact U.S. Will Let China Set WTO Terms

BELIING - When China uncharacteristically gave in to tough U.S. demands two weeks ago on copyright piracy and other intellectual property issues, the main unanswered question was: What did America give

The answer came this week in a visit to Beijing by U.S. Trade Representative Mickey Kantor. In a news conference Monday, Mr. Kantor said Washington would support China's bid to join the World Trade Organization.

More importantly to the Chinese, he reversed a previous position hy announcing that the U.S. government would consider China's entry into the global organization under accommodative trade rules afforded developing countries. Until recently, Washington had insisted that Beijing meet the same standards as other major industrial powers.

"We need to be flexible," Mr. Kantor said, referring to the United States, Europe and Japan. "I think we all agree that for certain purposes China, of course, is a developed country. For others it is a developing country." In background briefings, U.S. trade offi-cials said the practical result of the softened position on China's entry into the WTO is that China will be granted extra time - in some cases a matter of years - before it will be required to phase out certain tariffs and protective trade restrictions.

"China has a wide variety of characteristics," one U.S. trade official said. "There are places along the seaboard that are developing rapidly and look a lot like Taiwan and Korea did a few years ago. There are parts of the interior which are much poorer. But, overall as a trade regime, we are dealing with an enormously important, enormously large, powerful player.

Recognition of its hybrid status as a huge but still developing economy is precisely what the Chinese trade negotiators had been seeking when talks broke down for their entry into the World Trade Organization in December.

Mr. Kantor said new trade group talks with China are expected to begin in April in Geneva. "I have agreed to become personally involved with and review all proposals related to China's WTO accession," he said.

The U.S. concession on developing-country status was a particularly satisfying victory for Foreign Trade Minister Wu Yi, for whom Beijing's entry into the trade organization the successor to the Global Agreement on Tariffs and Trade —had been a primary goal.

Miss Wu's reputation as a tough negotiator had suffered in recent encounters with U.S. officials. The recent U.S.-China agreement on intellectual property enforcement, signed by Mr. Kantor on Saturday, was widely viewed as a capitulation to U.S. demands that the right, patent and trademark infringement.

After the signing ceremony, Miss Wn criti-cized the Americans and threatened to impose sanctions by failing to renew a trade memorandum between the two countries if Washington continued to block Beijing's entry into the international trading organization.

But, pleased with the new conciliatory tone set by Mr. Kantor, Miss Wu announced Monday that the 1992 bilateral memorandum of understanding obliging China to open its markets to imports from the United States

Hong Kong Delays End To Rate Cap On Savings

HONG KONG - Hong Kong postponed the third phase of its deregulation of deposit interest rates Tuesday to allow more time for a comprehensive study of the impact of the first two phases of liberalization.

The third, and final, phase was to take effect April 1, ending controls on all deposits of more than 24 hours through seven days. It now is unlikely to happen before October.

The delay is in the long-term best interest of the overall banking system, David Carse, deputy executive of the Hong Kong Monetary Authority, said. "Our motivadon is not to protect the banks per se," he told the financial affairs panel of the Legislative Council, Hong Kong's Parliament. "But we do want to protect the banking system. A profitable banking system is a safe banking system."

"We remain committed to deregulating time deposits," he added, "unless further steps would result in instability in the monetary and banking system." The first two phases of the deregulation, which were completed in January, covered rates on deposits fixed for more than a week. Since they began, there has been a sharp swing of funds into time deposits paying mar-ket rates, Mr. Carse said.

Our intention is to conduct a full assessment in August-September," he said.

"However, the January fig-ures will have been distorted by the sharp rise in interest rates to defend the Hong Kong dollar and by the rise in note circulation ahead of the Chinese New Year," Mr. Carse said. (AFP

Computer Maker Gets to Know New Shareholder

Bloomberg Business News BELJING - The way Safi Qureshey. the affable co-founder and chairman of the computer maker AST Research Inc. tells it, last month's purchase of a 40.25 percent stake in his U.S. company by the South Korean conglomerate Samsung was a marriage of convenience not born of a long courtship.

In just three months, initial contact between the companies turned into a $378 million near-takeover of the world's No. 6 maker of personal computers.

"It was the largest investment a Korean company bad made overseas." Mr. Qureshey said. "It made big beadlines there. I didn't realize that."

The marriage brought relief to sbareholders worried that AST bad become

Sampras's Powerful Serve Puts Away Agassi in 3 Sets

By Robin Finn New York Times Service

INDIAN WELLS, California — It was a shadowy court, but an inspired Pete Sampras put on such a luminous display of tennis upon it that his frazzled opponent, Andre Agassi, was left in the dark to play an increasingly desperate game of catch-up in their straight-set sundown final at the Newsweek Champions Cup.

When Agassi could not close the gap, Sampras took advantage Monday night to create a larger gap in their positions as the world's top two players.

"The bottom line is, I want to be No. 1 at the end of the year." said Agassi, who has not yet committed 31 unforced errors been to the place Sampras has in a match that commenced in

Labor Board to Issue Baseball Complaint

WASHINGTON - The National Labor Relations Board will issue an unfair labor practice complaint against the major league baseball owners, lew-after meeting with the agency. The attorneys, Chuck O'Connor and Frank Casey, were told of the decision during a two-hour meeting with the NLRB's general counsel, Fred Feinstein, and its New York regional di-rector, Daniel Silverman.

"Suffice it to say, there are certain things the clubs did that the board does not take issue with. There are other areas that the board does, or will, contest through the issuance of e complaint," O'Connor said during a news conference on the sidewalk

The head of the players' union, Donald Fehr, was to meet with the agency Tuesday afternoon and afterward Feinstein was expected to ask the NLRB's five-member board for permission to seek a preliminary injunction in federal court.

The NLRB board has authorized all but one of Feinstein's injunction requests. If he pursues an injunction, he probably would file next week in U.S. District Court in New York. The case would he assigned to one of the 39 judges on the court, and the individual judge would set the hearing date.

For the Los Angeles Rams, no news was bad news on Monday after a two-hour discussion among the 29 NFL owners on the team's proposed move to St. Louis, Missouri, was halted when Commissioner Paul Tag-liabue declared them hopelessly undecided.

Both Tagliabue and the Rams' president, John Shaw, confirmed that, by prior agreement, if no vote was taken this week, the move would be considered blocked.

League owners, who discussed the Rams' situation after asking their owner, Georgia Frontiere, and Shaw to leave the room, were advised in a let-ter from Missouri's attorney general, Jay Nixon, that he would file an antitrust suit in federal court if the NFL failed to approve the proposed move.

Tapie Tells Accuser to 'Shut Up'

By Barry James
International Herald Tribune

Bernard Tapie, the French politician and former president of the Olympique Marseille soccer team, who is accused of bribing players of a oppos-ing team to lose, told Olym-pique's former general manager Tuesday to "shut your face" as the man deyour face" as the man described attempts to cover up the affair.

Judge Bernard Langlade suspended the trial for 20 minutes after Tapic shouted at Jean-Pierre

Bernès launched a bombshell during the first day of the trial, on Monday, when, for the first time after two years of questioning, he directly accused Tapie of instigating the plot to bribe players from the Valenciennes team to go easy during a league match in

Following its 1-0 victory over Valenciennes, Olympique Marseille won the French championship for the fifth straight time and defeated AC Milan in the Enropean Champions'

Cup. But after the bribery allegations surfaced, the French soccer league stripped Marseille of its fities, relegated the team to the second division and force Tapic out as club

Taking the witness stand in his own defense for the first time, Tapic said Tues-day he had no motive for bribing Valenciennes. He said Bernes' accusations were false and unsubstantiated by anyone else.

"Everyone was blaming him, so now he is saying it was me," Tapic said.

Jean-Jacques Eydelie, the former Marseille player accused of offering the bribes, told the court that "I have been to prison to protect Bernes. Mr. Tapie has always told me he was not aware" of the bribes.

Police in England Arrest Grobbelaar, 2 Other Players

SOUTHAMPTON, England Goalkeepers Bruce Grobbelaar of Southampton and Hans Segers of Wimbledon and Aston Villa striker John Fashanu were arrested Tuesday in connection with match-fixing allegations, police said.

Also arrested were a Malaysian businessman and Fashanu's girlfriend.

Grobbelaar was arrested at his rented home in Lymington just before 7 A.M., while Sepers was detained at his home in Fleet, Hampshire police said. Later in the day, Fashanu was arrested in Birmingham several hours after his girlfriend, Melissa Kassamapsi, was detained at her home in north London. Hampshire police identified the fourth person arrested as Heng Suan Lim, a Malaysian businessman living in London. His arrest lent weight to allega-tions that a Malaysian gam-bling syndicate had been rigging matches in England.

No charges were immediately filed against the five, who were being held at police stations for questioning. They were expected to be held overnight.

A Hampshire police detective, Rod Davis, said the investigation was continuing with other arrests possible. News reports said that as many as six Premier League players could be implicated. Davis said Grobbelaar was arrested "on suspicion of being involved in a conspiracy to de-"There is an operation going

Grobbelaar, 37, appeared stunned as he was led from his house after an hour of questioning by police. The Zimbabwean goalkeeper and former Liverpool star refused to comment as he left to be driven to Southampton police headquarters.

Grobbelaar was put under investigation in November after a tabloid newspaper published allegations that he received bling syndicate to throw matches while playing for Liverpool.
Grobbelaar denied the charges, which were based on allegations made by his former Zimbabwean business partner, Chris Vincent. The Sun newspaper alleged that Grobbelaar received £40,000 ($600,000) to allow goals during a match between Liverpool and Newcastle last season. The gambling syndicate allegedly made £3 million on the match, which Newcastle won, 3-0.

After the allegations against Grobbelaar were published, the Football Association charged him with misconduct but allowed him to continue playing while police pursued their investigation. He has also continued to play in international matches for Zimbabwe.

The day after Grobbelaar was charged by the FA, Fasharm said attempts were being made to link him to the scandal. Fashann, 31, is a well-known television personality in Britain as co-host of the Gladiators show. He is also a representative for UNICEF.

NEW YORK — After grousing about it for eternities, Republicans are finally making a sincere effort to destroy the welfare state.

For the past 60 years Republicans have been saying the welfare state was destroying us, or would destroy us, and we'd bet-

This explains all the congressional activity aimed at afflicting the afflicted and comforting the comfortable. Republicans have decided to quit talking the talk and start walking the walk. Decided to bring down Ole Devil Welfare

Newt, lad! It's good to see somebody finally do more than talk, Newt, and everybody knows you're smart enough to talk 300 words a minute, teach school and make a monkey out of the Democratic Party all at be same time, but still —

Eisenhower, Nixon, Reagan - those were serious men, as the ture will prevail. guy told the punk about the Ma-lia people the punk was fooling around with. "Serious men," the guy said. When men like that decided to stay with the welfare state regardless of what the Republican boilerplate said, they didn't do is lightly.

The welfare state is now so old that most Americans now alive don't even know what was here before it came along. It is almost old enough for Social Security, and that's old.

Old, Newt. Old, you starryeyed young right-wingers with dreams of the triumphantly uninhibited total-market-world to come. And here's what old means:

Entrenched in life, that's what it means. Set in its ways. Some parts not working too well. A pain in the neck, liver and lights to anybody who has to live with it, but a pain not easily escaped, because it's your heritage and your future.

But 1 am carried away into poetie delicacies inappropriate for political screeds. I should be content to note that the United States has been a welfare state for over a quarter of its existence. For so long that it might well be renamed "The United Welfare State of America."

Trying to destroy it now is like trying to destroy the Ameri-can system. When planning to destroy government systems, sound practice suggests having something ready to replace them. Even then it's a risky bet. Witness Lenin, who planned to replace a destroyed system with

Marx. police and prison. The Newtites appear to be sentimental romantics. They seem to believe that once the welfare state is in ruins the good old days will resume, the good old system will cut in again, good old American human na-

Actually the good old days were, as the book title says, terri-ble. Like them or not, these are the good old days here and now.

Destroying the state without much idea of what might replace it was the program of the so-called "New Left," which yearned to improve the world in the 1960s and 1970s.

They were products of the anti-war passion of the Vietnam years. Their theory was that the United States was so dreadful a place that whatever it became after its destruction could only be better. Were you once a New Leftie, Newt?

Chita Rivera: The Comeback of a Volcanic Dancer

By David Richards
Washington Past Service

MONTREAL — Chita Rivera is 62. She doesn't look it. She doesn't act it. She doesn't want to bear about it. After all, in "Kiss of the Spider Woman," the Tony-winning musical coming to the National Theatre on Thursday, she kicks as high as any Rockette, shimmies like Josephine Baker in her prime and dances a Woman herself, she even picks her way seductively (and fearlessly) over a web of steel dozens of feet above the stage. And she's barely panting afterward.

"Sure, it blows me away that I'm this age," Rivera says. "But I'll tell you the only thing that really upsets me. I sometimes feel I'm being judged now in light of my age. I hope that's not true. I don't want people to say, 'Isn't it amazing she's doing all that in her 60s!' I want them to look at the work and say, 'Isn't it good!' But the age does seem to come up all

She knits what in its normal state is a wrinkle-free brow.

"I'll tell you what's really scary. My boys, the boys in the chorus, are 30,

"I think I'll know when it's time to put up the dancing shoes. But I keep reminding my daughter — and anyone else who is a friend — You must tell me if the skirts start to get too short. You must tell me when anywho constantly reruns her old movies thing starts to look strange out there." Because if I flip out some Saturday night, I want to be the first to know.

but recently they have begun refer-ring to her as a legend.

For the 18-month North American tour of "Spider Woman," which began in November, she alone is billed above the title and is reportedly taking home the highest salary of her

Despite the preponderance of evidence, Chita does not think she's a star," notes Fred Ebb, the "Spider Woman" lyricist and a longtime friend. "She thinks she's Chita, one tango that leaves scorch marks on the of the gang, a member of the team, floorboards. As the alluring Spider part of the chorus. There's nothing self-aggrandizing or pompous about her. What you see is what you get."

This particular afternoon, Rivera is dressed entirely in black — black pants, black shirt, black boots, black headband holding back her curly black hair. She's even sipping tea out of a black "Kiss of the Spider Woman" mug. The only suggestion of the lush, technicolor performance she gives every night is provided by her fingernails. They are jungle red.

On the surface, "Kiss of the Spider Woman" would seem to be the least likely of musicals. Based on the novel by Manuel Puig, which also inspired the 1985 movie of the same name, it unfolds in a Latin American prison, where toriure and betrayal are regular occurrences. Its two principal boys, the boys in the chorus, are 30, lar occurrences. Its two principal male characters, a gay window dress-the way I used to look at the guys when I was that age. You know what I'm saying? You can go to jail for that! I mean, I'm still wearing leather.

"I think I'll know when it's time to the will to survive, which is where

Rivera comes in. Aurora exists only in the feverish who constantly reruns her old movies in his head. As he does, she materializes onstage, an escapist fantasy in canary yellow feathers or white satin view Aurora as something more, a divine being of sorts, who helps usher people into the afterlife. Rivers admits to a fascination with death. On the collar of her shirt she sports a miniature gold angel, its wings spread in flight, although right now the angel has somehow gotten turned around and looks to be plummeting straight toward Hell.

Nine years after she was badly injured in an auto accident, Rivera is back on stage and a hit in "Kiss of the Spider Woman."

For the time being, she needn't worry. Rivera is at the pinnacle. As Aurora, the fabulous South American film goddess in "Spider Woman," she won the 1993 Tony Award (her second) for best actress in a musical. Critics have always written enthusiastically about her performances in such shows as "Bye Bye Birdie," "Chicago" and "The Rink," canary yellow feathers or white satin and rakish fedora, to take him ago, when I was doing 'Can-Can,'" as way from the sordid realities of the explains, quickly repositioning the present Eventually, she gives him the courage to confront death itself.

Rivera sees the character as a synthesis of Rita Hayworth and Marlene Dietrich—fire lapping at ice, abanthese big old burly guys, even wear them. I give them to fans. That way, you see, everyone has a guardian arbitrary and the performance. But she also likes to gel to sit on their shoulder. I guess it's "A dancer gave me this seven years" part of my caretaker side. I like to stroke people, have them feel better. What can I say? I'm not a terribly complicated person. Some would even call me a goody-two-shoes. There's so much that's swell in life that I don't have a lot of time for the negative."

Nine years ago, her career almost came to an end. Rivera, then starring on Broadway in "Jerry's Girls," was making a U-turn on West 86th Street late one Sunday night when a taxi slammed into her Datsun 280-Z. Her two passengers escaped with minor injuries, but the fibula and the tibia of Rivera's left leg were broken in a dozen places. Two operations (and 12 tiny screws) put the leg back together, but there was some doubt as to whether Rivera, the most volcanic of dancers, would be able to resume her profession. It wasn't, however, a doubt that she herself entertained. "It never entered my mind," she recalls. "I guess I'm a bit naive and my naiveté protects me. I thought, O. K., I've been hit.' And the pravers started. They had to cut the top of the roof to get us out. Blood everywhere. I never saw a picture. Didn't want to. I just remember seeing the sadness on this little Oriental man's face. Nobody told me he was the man who hit. me. But I knew it was him. So I said. 'I'm fine, I'm fine.' I didn't realize I had screwed up badly until much later, when the X-ray technician, who was a darling, came into my hospital room, held up my X-rays and Said, Boy, you really did a good job on yourself. And I said, Oh, [exple-

"But that's where the old training kicks in. Dancers are so obedient. We do whatever the choreographer tells us to do. Jerry Robbins could tell me to jump off a building and land on the left foot and I'd say, 'O. K.,' be-cause I know he knows what he's talking about. After the accident, I had the best doctor and the best therapists — the silent angels, I call them — and I did exactly what I was told. I thought of the doctor as my father. I wanted him to be pleased with me. So when I walked back and forth in that damn hallway, I really made an effort to force the beel down the right way so that he would say, 'It looks good, Chita, looks good.'"

Eleven months later, she was up and dancing, Eighteen months later, she had signed to star in a grueling national tour of "Can-Can." "It nev-er occurred to me that "Can-Can" is nothing but dancing," she notes.
"And I had done the original production with Gwen Verdon, which was a killer. So I said to my choreographer,

"O. K., you get four cartwheels and you can have four splits."

She delivered them. "Dancers are the workhorses of the theater," she says. Like athletes, they go to the challenge. "Tve always worked hard. It's the only way I know I'm doing something. Hopefully, there's no sweat and I am elegant enough to look as if I am galloping along. But I am a workhorse.".

THE London play left in the lurch when the actor Stephen Fry fled with stage fright is closing two months early with losses of more than £300,000 ($480,000). Fry walked out of "Cell Mates," by Simon Gray, shortly after its opening following harsh reviews of his performance, and was missing for three days, prompting fears for his safety. "He has got a lot to answer for, said the producer, Duncan Weldon. "He totally obliterated business." Mates," which opened in Fehruary, had been expected to run until late May.

Amita Baker, Boyz II Men and Barry White each won two honors at the Soul Train Music Awards. Baker won awards for her rhythm-and-blues single "Body and Soul" and album "Rhythm and Love." Boyz II Men won for their album "II" and the single "I'll Make Love to You," and White won for best R&B song by a male best R&B album.
